CHICAGO'S GREATEST SUCCESSES

LLOYD'S, Indiana and Morgan-sts.,

Though only established seven years ago, has long enjoyed an immense trade, and, although located in a remote quarter, yet by wondrous energy,

Strictly Honest Dealing,

And prices so low as to be simply absurd, has attracted hosts of buyers of

Dry Goods, Notions, Shoes

AND

Housekeeping Goods

From all parts of the city. TO STILL INCREASE HIS TRADE Mr. LLOYD sought a store in the best location possible; the best he would have, none but the best would suit him, and the demands of

OUR MIGHTY MILLIONAIRES

For the very best could not daunt the dauntless Lloyd. So he secured the stores formerly occupied by Thomas Bassett, Hatter; McNamara's Restaurant, and Chas. T. Wilt's Trunk Store, whole three being made into one, remodeled and improved, at a vast expense, and when complete will be an ornament to Chicago. Such a place only does Lloyd count good enough for his friends and patrons, and to such a place it will be his heart's delight to invite and welcome you in a short time to his

YOUR FRIEND SEA

Trims Hats Free!

Not Sea his own dear self, but thirty pretty, busy, tasty ladies, deftly, quickly trim hats freely.

A SEA OF FINERIES!

FANCY pictures no scene in the reception rooms, parlors, and on the streets equal or to compare with the gorgeous display of Fancy Millinery now on exhibition at SEA'S, the great connoisseur of all that will decorate the form or please the eye of the most fastidious of society's favorites. The immense throngs of society ladies who visit SEA'S Emporium of Fashion in Fine Millinery on the second floor of his palatial stores have been more than pleased, really delighted, at the unlimited and most varied assortment of Foreign Patterns in Bonnets, Hats, Turbans, beautiful designs in trimming in Mill Rose, Langtry Flowers, large Hats for elegant Women, small Hats for Misses, and delicate little Pokes for Children.

THEIR OWN DESIGNERS.

They have also connected with the establishment some of the best designers in this country, whose entire time is devoted to the production of novelties, special orders, and fine art millinery of the highest order. The work of these artist milliners compare favorably with the most elegant Parisian modes, and so expert have they become in their art that the best judges often accept their work in preference to those of the Parisian patterns. The manager of this department is a gentleman of taste and ability, whose time is given up to a critical oversight of this department. In the "Sea of Finery," which we observe was dazzling in its varied colors, lovely plumage, artistic shapes, magnificent reception toilets, and all that would make life beautiful to a woman.

Sea may well be proud of this, the banner Millinery establishment of this country.

Silk Department.

On the main floor to the left of the grand entrance will be found the Silk Department, and here, readers, pause, gaze with rapture on the fruit of the looms of the most celebrated Silk manufacturers of the world. Sea ransacked every known portion of the civilized world to secure bargains, to buy up manufacturers in the old country, and has secured sole agency of some of the most celebrated brands. The display of Fine Silks in all grades, all colors, all prices is something wonderful to look upon, extremely low prices to buy, and highly satisfactory to wear. The motto of Sea has always been in every department to purchase the finest goods so that he can sell them at the prices of cheaper goods. In this department we also find a vast concourse of ladies making purchases, securing bargains in every instance. An efficient manager has charge of this department, and to him is due great credit for the systematic, thorough business manner in which all the salesmen attend to the necessities of their customers.

Lace Department

The Lace, also under (ABLE) management, is very complete in assortment and richness in quality, ranging from the common to the finest thread Laces, also Oriental and Antique Laces, with the esthetic tastes. Large variety of Embroideries, Lace Handkerchiefs, Firlines—Lace made up in every form. They have special sales in all these departments, usually Handkerchief sales on Mondays.

The Following Testimonials Will Explain Themselves:

Mr. A. H. GREEN, Chicago:

Dear Sir: With reference to the quality of your work in "Wood Finishing" done at my residence four years ago, I can say that it is entirely satisfactory, and your recent cleaning of the same by the simple process of washing proves the excellence and durability of the finish attained by your system.

I am pleased to state that the work now appears equally fresh and bright as when originally finished. Yours truly,

GEO. M. PULLMAN.

Mr. A. H. GREEN:

Dear Sir: I take pleasure in stating that six years ago you overhauled the furniture of The Tribune counting-room, and gave it a dressing with your peculiar mode, which proved very satisfactory, and that today, after the washing you lately gave it, the work seems as perfect as when first done. Respectfully yours,

A. COWLES,

Chicago, March 24, 1883.

Mr. A. H. GREEN:

Dear Sir: I desire to express to you my entire satisfaction in regard to your method of fine wood-finishing done over five years ago in my Art Studio. It seems to still have all the fineness and brilliancy it had when first finished, and I should not desire or permit any other to be used, either at my residence or Art Gallery, so long as I can be sure of your being able to do it for me. BASEMENT.

THE CALUMET CLUB.

The Construction of Its Superb Building Architecturally Considered—The Interior Arrangement and Decoration.

The opening of the new home of the Calumet—the Indian "pipe of peace" club—calls for a detailed description of some of the prominent features in its construction. Like the old Indian pipe, it is red in color, and the brick is from the noted pressed-brick works of the Chicago Anderson Pressed-Brick Company, and the exterior gives a remarkable illustration of the handsome as well as the durable qualities of this brick.

The interior as a whole is perhaps the finest in the West, and in the decoration the most striking effects have been produced by the use of stained glass. The large staircase window illustrates a brilliant sunset scene on some Western lake, with ranges of mountains against the bright sky, the foreground filled with dense, rich foliage cut from most beautiful glass. In the parlor are studies of marine effects, "Storm," "Calm," and "Night" being pictured; the many windows in the building show endless forms of design and color, each appropriate to its place; and throughout every effect has been executed without the aid of the brush, the brilliant material and proper handling of lead lines producing the effect wished. This magnificent embellishment in stained-glass, the best our city has seen, marks an epoch in its history in the West, and too much credit cannot be given to the artists, Messrs. McCully & Miles.

The frescoing, although very simple in design, exhibits great care in the study of the different colors. Bronze effects have been tried with excellent success, and the frescoing, as a whole, is a credit to the decorators, Messrs. Healy & Millet, who executed it.

The window draperies and portières are artistic, correct, and beautiful. Those leading into the parlor and billiard-hall out from the grand lobby demand more than passing notice. They are simply works of art, and the painter's canvas could hardly place before the eye a more beautiful or pleasing combination or produce an effect more appropriate than has Mr. Haskins in his study for the hangings in these doorways. The hangings in the large archways spanning the face of the bays in the parlors and card-rooms are beautiful, and demonstrate to the educated eye the careful study of artistic effects. But one does not have to look here alone to find beautiful examples of this gentleman's work. The leading mansions of this city and the Northwest bear witness to the always artistic and appropriate treatment of interior decorations, and also to Mr. Haskins' happy faculty of putting himself in in his patron's place to the extent that he creates beautiful interiors embodying the individual ideas of the occupants of the room or residence treated. His rooms in the Central Music-Hall are among the most popular resorts for interior furnishings of artistic exclusive design, and he enjoys a large patronage from our wealthy and intellectual citizens.

The furniture is in every way artistic; each piece is a combination of elegance and comfort, and is exceedingly creditable to Messrs. Tomlinson & Carsley, who manufactured all the furniture from special designs by H. L. Crosby.

A noticeable feature of this interior are eight wood mantels in oak, cherry, and butternut, all in special designs and elegantly carved and finished, the work of the Strong Manufacturing Company.

The elevators, though last, are not by any means the least noticeable. The service is Hale's standard hydraulic, two in number. They are complete in workmanship and the cars are elegantly finished.

MR. SMALLEY.

THE SENSATION OF THE WEEK.

LONDON, May 5.—[G. W. Smalley's Cable Letter to New York Tribune.]—The defeat of the Ministry on the Affirmation bill will not cause their resignation, but cool observers believe that their position has been seriously shaken. The anti-Bradlaugh campaign throughout the country, conducted for months past with unscrupulous energy, has had the result of rousing into malevolent activity all the latent bigotry and intolerance. There has been no corresponding effort on the other side; hence, as Mr. Gladstone admitted in his great speech, the effect of the controversy has been injurious to the Liberal party. This effect is sure to be enhanced by Thursday's vote. The waverers are already quitting a Government which with a nominal majority of eighty allows itself to be defeated on a measure for which Mr. Gladstone made one of the greatest speeches of his life. The whole question remains open, a constant source of animosities and irritations and of fresh defections from the Liberal ranks. The Ministers say that they prefer defeat to a narrow majority, with the prospects of further contests in committee, and the certainty of the ultimate loss of the measure in the House of Lords. Seven nominal non-Irish Liberals voted against the Ministry. Mr. Samuel Morley, who recommended Mr. Bradlaugh to the Northampton electors, staid away. The Tory majorities were actually due to a series of small incidents. For example, Sir George Campbell's illness; one Liberal who had dined too well went into the wrong lobby; and the third was enchained by Tory beauty till the division was over. The Tories, instinctively aware that a heavy blow had been dealt the Government, indulged in delirious demonstrations of delight.

Mr. Bradlaugh's appeal last night for permission to take the oath was foredoomed to denial, but was supported by himself in a speech dignified, logical, eloquent, utterly unanswerable, and sufficient to reconquer the sympathies of people not blinded by partisan or theological rancor. The House gave its usual negative majority.

THE IRISH.

Few believed the report circulated yesterday in Dublin and London of the arrest in New York of Walsh and Sheridan. The Government consider the evidence on which the grand jury found true bills against them and Tynan as amply sufficient to warrant their extradition. They would themselves extradite in a similar case. No request will be addressed to Washington, except in the regular course of legal proceedings. The communications hitherto exchanged respecting the preparation of plots in America did not originate in London. The Standard's New York correspondent telegraphs fairly the Tribune's explicit declaration against the fantastic confusion of murder and politics, but astonishes the public by adding his own belief that the majority of Americans are opposed to the surrender of the refugees. The acquittal of Fitz-Harris was the consequence of Justice O'Brien's strong charge in his favor, and disposes of all cavils against the fairness of the jury trials. The Dublin authorities, in spite of the second disagreement of the jury in the case of Kelly, have no intention to have recourse to a tribunal of Judges, nor to a change of venue to Belfast. Delaney's testimony as to Kelly's share in the Phenix Park murders will strengthen the case of the prosecution, but will not insure conviction, since it was not a deficiency of evidence which caused the previous failures of justice. The confessions of Delaney and Caffrey practically complete the account of the Phenix Park murders, and their truthfulness is admitted. American testimony to the moderation of the Irish conventions at Philadelphia excites mild astonishment among English statesmen, to whom the conventions are mainly significant as avowing the purpose to break up the United Kingdom. It is considered that Mr. Parnell's Presidency of a seditious league, including American branches for which he is responsible, but which he cannot control, may yet bring him into trouble here. The appeal to the laborers is interpreted as meaning that Mr. Parnell is convinced that Irish farmers are to well satisfied with the working of the Land act to give sufficient support to further agitation.

THE LIBERAL CLUB.

The opening ceremony of the National Liberal Club was really a magnificent demonstration—1,900 members from all parts of the country dining together in the Aquarium. The Provincials, consisting mainly of delegates of Liberal associations, made the gathering peculiarly representative. They gave Mr. Gladstone a wonderful reception, and sat patiently through Lord Granville's clever but half audible speech. The vastness of the space proved too much even for Mr. Gladstone's voice. His address was powerful, but was ill-adapted to the occasion, and comparatively ineffective. Lord Roseberry was heard throughout his brief but pointed speech. His and Mr. John Morley's views of the Liberalism of the future offered a sharp contrast. Mr. Morley delivered an address ominous, if not menacing, in its iconoclastic Radicalism.

ART.

The private view at the Royal Academy yesterday was less crowded than usual, owing to the restriction of invitations. Those present agreed with the papers this morning in considering the exhibition not above mediocrity, with a general lack of originality, learning, and refinement, even of energy. Mr. Millais sends chiefly portraits, Mr. Tadema one masterpiece of antique genre, Mr. Leighton several examples of technical perfection, Mr. Orchardson an elaborate scene of Voltaire at the Duke de Sulli's table, which is reckoned the chief sensational picture of the year. Fildes, Boughton, Hall, Hook, and Pointer have important contributions. Mr. Frith's picture of a private view at the Royal Academy is a triumph of vulgarity, wherein not a few of his fellow-academicians keep him company.

THE STAGE.

At the Haymarket will be given tonight Mr. Herman Merivale's English version of Victorien Sardou's "Fedora," with Mrs. Bernard Beere in the title rôle. The play has been elaborately prepared and mounted. Miss Gertrude Kellogg appeared on Tuesday at the Gaiety matinée in several scenes in "Macbeth," and was kindly noticed by the English papers. Kate Vaughan's benefit at the same house on Thursday drew a fashionable and crowded house, the Prince of Wales being present, and people paying 40 guineas for a box.

PERSONAL.

MR. JENNINGS.

GLADSTONE'S DEFEAT AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

LONDON, May 5.—[L. J. Jennings' Special Cable to the New York World.]—Although Mr. Gladstone takes no immediate steps in consequence of the decision of the House of Commons in Mr. Bradlaugh's case, it is universally admitted that the Government has been much weakened by the defeat of the Affirmation bill, and that it has suffered still more by the failure of the attempt, which was made on Friday, to admit the member for Northampton by a trick which will excite more indignation than all that has preceded it in this tiresome business. The Affirmation bill was defeated Thursday by the very narrow majority of three votes, but the majority for Sir Stafford Northcote on the succeeding day was 106 in a much thinner house. The device of the previous question sprung upon the House so unfairly had not unnaturally the effect of exciting great resentment among the members. No satisfactory solution of the main difficulty presents itself, but it is very clear that on account of the wrangle the Gladstone Administration is losing ground every day, and it seems altogether likely that the little pebble may upset the big coach. An analysis of the division on Thursday is interesting. It shows that the Conservatives were successful in rallying their full strength, all but four of their members being present, and those four absentees being detained from their parliamentary duties through illness. They were reinforced by seven Liberals and forty-five Irish members. The increased majority on Friday was caused by extensive defections from the Liberal ranks of members who refused to be driven into Mr. Bradlaugh's arms.

THE IRISH CONSPIRATORS.

I am utterly unable to get any official information with reference to the alleged or supposed extradition proceedings in the cases of Tynan, Walsh, and Sheridan, but I have very good reasons for believing that their circumstantial accounts, which have been published in the newspapers on both sides of the Atlantic, are purely imaginary. This much is certain: that any formal application that may be made will be based entirely upon the action of the grand jury at Dublin and the evidence that has been duly sworn to in court. The British Government, being confident that justice will be done in due time by the United States, will run no risk of placing itself in a false position by any departure from the ordinary and strictly regular course of proceedings. I may say that no great interest in the possibility of a contest over the extradition proceedings is manifested by the public at large, the belief being universal that the Government and people of the United States will do the proper thing at the proper time. The great mass of men, so far as I can judge, would like to see Tynan in the dock, believing him to be much more guilty than the wretched dupes who are going by dozens to the gallows or the death in life of penal servitude. It seems altogether probable that the lives of the two men who pleaded guilty to the charge of participating in the Phenix Park murders will be spared. Their statements as to the inexorable compulsion that was brought to bear upon them in the society which they had joined so heedlesly has had a profound effect.

THE FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

The United States Department at the Fisheries Exhibition, which opens this day week, fills an immense space and is rapidly approaching completion. Much of the exhibit has already arrived, and that part of it which it is anticipated will prove the most interesting by far—the display of live fish in tanks—is already at the hall. The space allotted to your neighbors from the Dominion of Canada is also occupied by a well-prepared and extensive collection. Altogether the whole affair is the most wonderful exhibition of the kind ever seen in England—or for that matter in the world. It will be opened by the Prince of Wales.

ART.

The exhibition of the Royal Academy this year is unusually good, two or three well-known artists in particular contributing works that are likely to create a great stir in the world of art. Mr. J. E. Millais, besides several portraits, has a ghost picture called "The Gray Lady." The ghost in question is said to haunt the house of a friend of the artist, and has been sketched from that friend's description—not, as it might be said, from the life. To my mind the picture is not very successful. The two best paintings in the exhibition, I think, are by Riviere and Orchardson. Your readers can form some opinion of the amount of jealousy and disappointment which are caused by such an exhibition when I tell them that this year there were not less than 2,000 pictures rejected.

MR. GLADSTONE CAST DOWN.

Mr. Gladstone had a private view of the pictures early yesterday, before entering on the business of his busy day. He is said to take his defeat in the Bradlaugh case a good deal to heart—which would not be surprising, seeing how hard he worked to secure the passage of the Affirmation bill.

NOTES.

Mrs. Oliphant's tireless pen has been at work again, and her novel dealing with American characters is to be published in four parts in Blackwood's Magazine.

I hear that there is to be an important change in Radical journalism, and that a new editor is to assume charge of the Pall Mall Gazette. Who he is to be is not announced. Prof. John Morley, who is now Mr. Cowen's colleague in the representation of Newcastle-on-Tyne, retires from the Pall Mall, it is said, with a view to devoting himself exclusively to a political career.

L. J. JENNINGS.

THE BILL ITSELF.

THE BRADLAUGH AFFIRMATION BILL EXPLAINED.

[London Truth, April 21.]—As I observe that there is great and extraordinary ignorance in regard to the object of the Affirmation bill, it may be as well that I should explain what this object really is. As the law at present stands, any atheist may take the oath of allegiance, and in order to sit in Parliament he must take it. He can only be hindered from so doing if he claims to affirm his allegiance, and if at the same time he explains that he has taken this course because he does not believe that any additional force is given to the recital portion of the declaration of allegiance by the words following it—viz.: "So help me God." When Mr. Bradlaugh came to the table of the House of Commons to swear his allegiance, the Speaker allowed Sir Stafford Northcote to interfere, and to consult the House as to whether this should be permitted, because Mr. Bradlaugh had already claimed to affirm, and stated his ground for so doing. Subsequently, when another elected member came up to swear, Sir Wilfrid Lawson sought to interfere, when the Speaker ruled that no interference was permissible, because this other member had not previously asked to be allowed to affirm.

The result of these rulings is that any atheist may sit in the present House of Commons by taking the oath of allegiance, except Mr. Bradlaugh, and that Mr. Bradlaugh may take the oath and his seat if he be elected to any Parliament except the present one.

The object of the bill is not, therefore, to enable atheists to sit in Parliament, for this they can do already, but to enable them to sit without going through a form which to them may be unmeaning, but which to all who are not atheists is a profanation, when taken by an atheist, of what is regarded as sacred. This is obscured by the Conservatives for party purposes. This, however, does not alter facts. The bill, as it at present stands is retrospective—that is to say, any person who has already been elected, and who has neither taken the oath nor affirmed, may affirm. Mr. Bradlaugh is the only person who is in this position. Whether it should be retrospective or not is a question of detail, and not of principle. The Government have, however, been obliged to yield, and to agree to make it non-retrospective, because a certain number of their followers, who have in previous sessions opposed Mr. Bradlaugh being allowed to swear, want a plausible excuse for changing their course of action, and hope, by running with the hare and hunting with the hounds, to stand well alike with their constituents who are opposed to the Affirmation bill and with those who are in favor of it.

EARLY CHICAGO.

A Letter from a Soldier Who Was Here from 1833 to 1836.

OTSEGO, Allegan Co., Mich., April 20.—The Hon. John Wentworth—DEAR SIR: I was born in Pawlet, Rutland County, Vt., April 3, 1815. I enlisted in the United States army April, I think, 1833, at Oswego, N. Y. I rendezvoused at Sackett's Harbor, from which place I sailed with a detachment of recruits on board of a schooner to Fort Niagara. From thence we marched to Buffalo. We sailed from thence on board of steamboats to Fort Gratiot, at the foot of Lake Huron, where we were embarked on board of a schooner, which, after a long and tedious voyage, brought us to Fort Dearborn. This was some time in the early part of the summer of 1833. I was there soon enough to help fire the National salute, the 4th of July, 1833. Maj. John Fowle was in command of Fort Dearborn, but he left in a few days. Capt. De Lafayette Wilcox took command. He was succeeded by Maj. George Bender. The garrison of Fort Dearborn consisted of Company A, Capt. Joseph M. Baxley, and Company B, Capt. De Lafayette Wilcox. The sutler at the Fort was a son of Gen. Hugh Brady, of Detroit, who was our Inspector-General. I do not remember any other store in Chicago besides the sutler's. There might have been others. Maj. John Green succeeded Maj. George Bender in command of the fort, and Maj. De Lafayette Wilcox succeeded Maj. John Green. Maj. Wilcox was in command when I left in 1836.

Ordnance-Sergeant Joseph Adams, now living at South Evanston, Ill., was at Fort Dearborn when I arrived there, and was there at the time I left. The schooner that I came there in anchored out in the lake. Sergt. Adams had charge of the mackinaw boat that took me ashore.

The annual payment to the Indians was an important event to everybody in Chicago and in the vicinity. I was one of the guards that went out to guard those who paid them the three years I was on duty at Fort Dearborn. The two first years they were paid from a small building across the river from the fort. The last year that I was there they were paid from a building west of the forks of the river. I was the non-commissioned officer who had charge of the guard the last two years.

During the time I was at Fort Dearborn the Indians murdered two citizens somewhere between Milwaukee and Green Bay, and Capt. Joseph M. Baxley was sent with a detachment of soldiers from Fort Dearborn to capture them, which he succeeded in doing, and took them to the headquarters of the regiment at Green Bay.

Gen. Cass, Secretary of War, visited the fort while I was there. I remember helping to fire a salute in honor of the memory of Gen. Lafayette, who died at Paris, May 10, 1834, while I was in the service at Fort Dearborn. Gen. Andrew Jackson, who was President, ordered the same honors to be paid to his memory that were paid to Washington's.

I subscribed to and paid for one of the first papers published in Chicago. There were two published before I left. The first was named the Chicago Democrat. The next was the Chicago American. The harbor was opened while I was there. I saw the first large vessel that entered the harbor.

There was a lighthouse in Chicago in 1833. I supposed it was the first one. I never heard of one falling down.

I do not think there was a frame house in Chicago when I landed. The place grew rapidly from the first. It was a large village when I left in 1836.

Old Fort Dearborn was on the south side of the river. It had two bastions, one on the northwest corner, the other on the southeast corner. It had two gates, one on the north and the other on the south side. The block house was in the southwest corner. The officers' quarters were on the west side of the fort, and the soldiers' barracks were on the east.

I left Fort Dearborn in the spring of 1836, and returned to Oswego, N. Y., where I remained until 1846, when I came to Otsego, Mich., where I have resided ever since. I enlisted in the first company that was raised in this county in 1861. I was in the service all through the Rebellion—over four years. I served in the Sixth Michigan Volunteers, heavy artillery, and held a Captain's commission when finally discharged in September, 1865. I believe I inherited a love for a military life. My grandfather and father were soldiers of the Revolution. I had a brother wounded in the battle of Tippecanoe.

It is fifty years since I first landed in Chicago in 1833. I saw Chicago a few minutes in 1864 on my way to join my regiment in New Orleans. I was there a few hours the next year after the great fire.

This part of Michigan when I moved here in 1846 was comparatively new. I believe I have chopped and helped clear more land than any man in this town. My whole life has been one of severe toil and labor.

I cannot give dates, and what I write is from memory, and fifty years is a long time in a man's life.

There was a post school kept in a log house southeast of the fort. The lady who was teaching the school in 1833 married the Rev. Jeremiah Porter. The school was kept for the benefit of the children of the garrison. The teacher was paid from the post funds.

Very respectfully, HENRY STARK.

ILLINOIS FRUIT.

Prospects for an Unusually Large Crop of All Kinds of Fruit.

ANNA, Ill., May 4.—[Special Correspondence.]—It is now pretty generally conceded that the danger line is passed, and that the quantity of fruit grown in Southern Illinois this year will be the largest ever known. Last year the crop was almost totally destroyed by a cold snap April 10, so much so that the peaches, pears, cherries, and plums were all killed, and two-thirds of the strawberries, as well as some early vegetables, also killed. Now, at this writing, nothing has been killed, and extensive preparations are being made to handle the immense crop of strawberries, raspberries, cherries, pears, plums, peaches, and apples which the trees and vines are now loaded with.

The Illinois Central Railroad Company announces that a special fast train, for transporting fruit and vegetables to Chicago and intervening points, will be put on as soon as the bulk of shipments requires. This train will leave this place at about 12 o'clock noon and reach Chicago in time for the early market next morning. It will be no unusual sight to our fruit-growers this season to see a train of twenty-five or more fruit express-cars leave this (Union) county loaded with strawberries. One firm alone, Messrs. P. Earle & Sons, who have eighty acres in strawberries at this place, expect to ship during the best of the season two cars of berries per day. Besides the above, Villa Ridge, Pulaski County, has unusual prospects and will ship in the neighborhood of ten cars per day. Cobden, this county, five miles north of this place, in an ordinary season ships ten to fifteen cars per day, and will doubtless this season ship fifteen to twenty-five car-loads of strawberries per day. These car-load lots all go to Chicago, and that class of her 600,000 people who last year could not afford to eat strawberries at 40 to 50 cents a quart will this season undoubtedly have all they want at 10 to 15 cents per quart, and probably in some cases at even lower prices. The shipments will probably begin by May 15, and the fruit train will be needed before the 20th, for strawberries ripen up very rapidly under favorable circumstances.

Strawberries is but one of the items of fruits which will this season be forwarded to Chicago. Messrs. Earle have some thirty acres of raspberries, and a large number of other shippers also have large plantations. There are also blackberries by the acre and tomato plants by the hundreds of thousands, one grower alone, near Cobden, having 15,000 plants. And then there are acres of Japan muskmelons, the most luscious of fruits. Peaches will be marketed from June to October, and there will be a very large crop, unless some unforeseen accident occurs. The plum, cherry, and pear trees are also now loaded with green fruit, and the prospect for a large yield of apples was never better.

The only trouble which will arise from this great crop of fruit will be the scarcity of help and the box material. Berry pickers make from 75 cents to $2 per day, according to their ability, as the price paid is two cents per quart. The box mills are running to their fullest capacity, and may be able to fill all orders.

This will be a grand season for Southern Illinois fruit and vegetable growers, and excursions to Chicago will be better patronized than ever before.

Reports reach us of great activity in Centralia, seventy miles north of here, where the small-fruit business is rapidly increasing, and where the shipments this year will be far ahead of any previous year.

TRAINING-SCHOOLS.

What They Are Intended to Accomplish.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 3.—[Editor Globe-Democrat.]—I am asked by the editor to answer the question: "What will the Manual Training-School boys do on leaving school?"

Before venturing a few words on this most interesting subject let me say, for the sake of preventing confusion, that the Manual Training-School is not the polytechnic department of the university; and its graduates are not to be confounded with the civil and mechanical engineers, who combine with their higher scientific studies a certain amount of manual training. The Manual Training-School is of a lower grade. It admits boys, on examination, as young as 14, and its course of instruction extends through three years. I should add that this is but the third year of the school, and that our first class is to graduate next June; hence I cannot speak of what our boys have done after leaving us, but of what they now wish to do.

Now, first, I claim that our graduates will form a new article never before put upon an American market. They will stand in strong contrast to the graduates of high schools and academies, with whom they are on a fair equality as regards scholarship. When we wish to teach a canary to sing a particular tune we put him in a dark place where he can see nothing to interest him and compel him to hear the particular tune and nothing else, till, out of sheer desperation and weariness, he sings the only thing he is allowed to think of.

PRISON WALLS.

Have we not been training our boys too much on the same plan? Have we not walled in their vision till they could look only in certain directions, see certain activities, study certain forms of mental life? Half the occupations of men, half the domains of knowledge, many of the means and ends of intellectual culture, much that is specially favorable to moral and spiritual growth, is beyond their horizon. Need any one be surprised at the result of such seclusion? Like the bird, they learn certain tongues, they master certain arts, they become familiar with a certain narrow round of intellectual life. There is little freedom of choice or chance for liberal growth. They must perforce travel certain paths. They think, and for the most part with good reason, that to use their education—by which they mean their book-knowledge—they must go into the counting-room, become salesmen, or go into the "learned professions." In avoiding, with almost perfect unanimity, the mechanic arts, they do not make an intelligent choice, they follow only an ignorant prejudice. Now this evil of narrowness, this violation of the rights of children, as Prof. Felix Adler calls it, is what we are trying to cure by the introduction of the manual element.

A FOURTH "R."

We maintain that the "three R.'s" do not suffice. "Reading, 'Riting, and 'Rithmetic" are all very well, but they are not enough. We add at least a fourth "R," namely "'Rtisanship!" We propose to tear down the prison walls, to open all the doors, and to clear all the avenues to intellectual, moral, and material wealth. We have worshiped books till we have fancied that all wisdom and culture was bound up in them. We have bent so reverently at the shrine of the ancients that we have been made to believe that the pyramid of Jeezah, the temple of Diana at Ephesus, and the Athenian Parthenon were the product of inspired genius, while we pass over the steel arches of the St. Louis bridge without appreciating the fact that in genius, mechanical skill, scientific accuracy, beauty, and grace, it outshines them all. In languages, arts, and sciences the world of today surpasses all past ages; and education should mainly deal with living issues, and "lead out" in all directions.

CHOICE OF OCCUPATION.

Boys whose education has been well balanced will choose their occupations intelligently. They will not all travel the same road. We do not wish to repeat the old mistake. We should be sorry to see every boy of the Manual Training-School become a mechanic. I know that many are not fit for it; they will be more successful as lawyers, or editors, or buyers, or sellers. Will their manual training therefore be lost? Not at all. Just as it does not hurt a mechanic to know literature and science, so it will not hurt a lawyer or an editor to have a little common-sense on mechanical and concrete matters.

BALANCED EDUCATION.

No, we do not try in our school to wall-out letters, or art, or mathematics, or the elements of science; and hence we shall not be surprised to see our graduates traveling in various directions when they leave our doors. We shall not fetter their feet through fear of their leaping over their workbenches; nor when they hunger and thirst for the highest cultivation the university can give, shall we refuse to minister unto them lest, forsooth, we teach them too much, and they be not mechanics after all. A symmetrical or integral education is never to be feared; it will never lead a man out of this sphere; it is only the one-sided, narrow, walled-in education which distorts, misleads, and corrupts. I have claimed that our boys would be free from prejudice against manual labor; that they will appreciate mechanical skill, and if they have it, they will enjoy its practice. In general, I have claimed that our graduates will be

"BOTH ABLE AND WILLING TO WORK."

If I am right in this, I care little what particular work they undertake. They will choose their vocation wisely and follow it successfully. One of our great points is gained in intelligent choice.

In the prospectus of our Manual Training School, published in 1879, I quoted the experience of the Free Institute of Worcester, Mass. It is a technical school of higher grade than ours, and has a somewhat narrower course of tool instruction. It makes a specialty of machinists' work, and graduates mechanical engineers. Out of the seventy-four men who had graduated in mechanics in the first seven classes, there were at the time:

Journeymen mechanics	9
Superintendents, foremen, draughtsmen, or proprietors of manufacturing establishments	23
Mechanical or civil engineers	5
Farmers	2
Teachers, generally of drawing	8
Miscellaneous or unknown occupations	27
Total	74

Hence 53 per cent were either engaged in manual labor, or they had, through their superior training, won positions where they were directing the labor of others.

Two weeks ago the Springfield (Mass.) Republican advocated the establishment of a technical school in Springfield, arguing that the Worcester school had been of great value to the manufacturing interests of Worcester.

CENSUS OF THE MANUAL TRAINING-SCHOOL.

Now, perhaps it will be more to the point if I give the result of an inquiry among the pupils of my highest class, the boys who have worked in all our shops as joiners, woodturners, blacksmiths, and machinists, and who are fair practical draughtsmen, and who will finish their course in less than two months. They number twenty-nine, and they were asked to state frankly what work or occupation they wished to follow next year. Their answers were as follows:

To continue study in an advanced course	11
To enter a machine-shop	6
To enter an architect's office	4
To work as machine draughtsmen	3
To be an engraver	1
To be a blacksmith	1
To be a bricklayer	1
To enter real-estate business	1
To farm and raise stock	1
Total in the class	29

Now what these boys will really do, no one claims to know; circumstances will have as much to do with the matter as taste and fitness. I have given their appetites, and it appears that eleven of them are still hungry for study. I could carry this investigation into the lower (and larger) classes, but it is not necessary. I have answered the question as well as I could.

SUNDAY, MAY 6, 1883.

A STRIKE of the cigarmakers is imminent. All the manufacturers in the city were presented yesterday with the price-list for work adopted by the Cigarmakers' Union. They were further informed that if it was not agreed to no union man would go to work tomorrow morning. The manufacturers state that while they are willing to make a few concessions they cannot submit to all the demands of the union.

THE strike of the bricklayers is practically at an end. The intervention of the architects, who are opposed to seeing the summer frittered away in a senseless struggle, has not been without its good effect. Yesterday the Master Masons' Association and the Bricklayers' Union appointed committees of conference. They will meet tomorrow morning, and it is confidently expected that a compromise satisfactory to all parties in interest will be speedily agreed upon.

AN important bill has been introduced in the French Chambers by M. Tirard, the Minister of Finance, which will have the effect of lifting the Government out of its financial difficulties. It proposes to convert the 5 per cent rentes into 4½ per cents. France has been paying 5 per cent on a debt of $1,400,000,000, which was borrowed twelve years ago to pay the German war indemnity. The credit of the country is now so good that it can borrow at 4 and even 3 per cent. It is proposed, however, in the bill to save the ½ per cent interest, amounting to $7,000,000, which would be sufficient for the charge of a new loan of $175,000,000 at 4 per cent. This saving will meet the deficit in the current year's budget. The conversion, if it shows anything, would seem to indicate that the financial difficulties of France hitherto have been the result of blundering rather than of any diminution of the actual debt-paying resources of the country. If France can borrow immense sums of money at from 3 to 4 per cent without adding anything to the burdens of the country it shows that she is a good ways off from bankruptcy.

THE Des Moines saloonkeepers have accepted the inevitable, and the friends of high license and decency are correspondingly elated. Forty-nine of the saloonkeepers have already taken out the $1,000 license, and it is understood that eleven more will do likewise tomorrow. Thus the city is sure of $60,000 in one item of revenue—an amount twice what was realized under the practically free-for-all policy. The nineteen saloonkeepers of Boone, Ia., struggled hard to avoid paying the $500 license, which became operative on the 1st inst. They formed a pool and agreed to keep closed, and let the bibulous inhabitants go thirsty. One "cocktail artist" whose license for the last year does not expire for a few days thought better of it, and opened up. The result is what might be expected. The number of saloons is now reduced to six, and they will be run in a far more respectable manner than heretofore. High license is everywhere in the air, and the Chicago brewers and liquor dealers, who are the virtual owners of three-fourths of the saloons in this city, will do well to prepare for its enforcement throughout the State.

AN interview with Consul-General Lefaivre, of France, who has just returned to his post in New York after six months' absence, gives a very hopeful view of French politics, and corroborates what THE TRIBUNE said to its readers about the untrustworthiness of the news sent from London to this country about the situation in France. M. Lefaivre thinks the present situation is favorable to the permanence of the present Government. The importance of the Radical demonstrations of last March was greatly exaggerated by the accounts sent to the newspapers of this country and England. M. Lefaivre, in company with Jules Ferry, the French Premier, viewed the demonstration, and there were but hundreds of actual participants where unfriendly observers declared they saw thousands.

A VERY remarkable change seems to have come over the Aldermanic sentiment in regard to telegraph-poles and the overhead system. A couple of weeks ago a resolution was passed in the Council instructing the Mayor to enforce the new ordinance which went into effect May 1, and it was proposed to authorize Mr. Barrett, City Electrician, to cut down wires indiscriminately. Yet at the Friday evening meeting of the Common Council a resolution was introduced to authorize the "District Telegraph Company of Chicago," which is said to be a cover for one of the great telegraph companies, to erect poles and string wires. In spite of the righteous indignation which pervaded the Council two short weeks ago, the publication of the new ordinance was ordered by a vote of 17 to 13, and it is said that but two more votes are needed in the Council to give new life to the overhead system and nullify all the attempts which have been made to enforce underground telegraphy in Chicago. It was hoped that this issue might be settled in an honest, straightforward way, but such a hope seems to be chimerical in all affairs in which the Chicago Common Council has any "say."

JUDGE TULEY decided a very curious case in American litigation yesterday. Several months ago one J. M. Kehoe, while on his death-bed, orally devised to R. I. Kehoe, as trustee, certain personal property, the proceeds of which were to be used for the payment of masses for the repose of the soul of the decedent. The heirs-at-law protested against the use of the property for any such purpose, and in order to settle the vexed question the trustee invoked the aid of the court. It was held on behalf of the heirs that the English common law previous to James I.—which is part of the law of Illinois, unless where modified by statute—pronounced all such bequests void for the reason that they were devoted to "superstitious uses." This doctrine the court dissented from on the ground that the Virginia bill of rights guaranteed perfect religious equality, and this bill followed the territory ceded by Virginia to the Union. The question of superstition, moreover, could not be brought into the case. Who can prove the existence or non-existence of Purgatory? It was sufficient to say that a very large number of the American people believed in its existence, and also had faith in the efficacy of the mass. It was their religious belief, and they had a right to act under it unquestioned.

THE RAILROADS AND HIGH LICENSE.

All industrial and commercial interests in this State are directly concerned in the movement for a high license, inasmuch as it will promote sobriety, energy, and fidelity among their employés, and contribute to public health and order. But the railroad companies have a special interest in the matter, because their affairs are much more affected than any others by the effects of liquor, which grow out of too many saloons.

It is the universal experience of the railroad attorneys that the great bulk of lawsuits they are required to defend for damages incident to so-called "accidents" can be traced to too much liquor. Misapprehension of instructions, running trains out of time, misplacing switches, collisions, and every variety of accident resulting in loss of life, the maiming of person, and the destruction of property is due, in nine cases out of ten, to negligence or recklessness, and these nine cases out of ten are due to whisky. The expense account of railroads is swelled enormously by the damages the companies are forced to pay for injuring and killing people. Juries show them no mercy. Indeed, the attorneys have come to despair of obtaining simple justice in the legal resistance to such claims, and the practice has become common of making the best settlement possible with the victims to the carelessness or drunkenness of the railroad employés. The losses which railroads suffer in damage to their own property and from defalcations and theft are also due in the main to the influences of liquor. Any practicable restraint upon dramselling which shall result in a reduction of the temptation to drunkenness and inattention among employés will be worth untold money annually to the railroad interests of this State.

The high-license system may be confidently counted upon to materially lessen the consumption of liquor and to reduce the frequency of drinking among railroad employés of every class by removing temptation. Under the free-whisky system countless doggeries are started all over the State which look to railroad employés alone for their support. Every prominent passenger-station in this city is the nucleus for a score or more of saloons. A nest of cheap gin-mills can be found in the neighborhood of every freight depot. The car-shops, the roundhouses, and the railroad yards similarly attract swarms of dramshops. Wherever there is a switch, or a station, or a side-track where a dozen or more employés are engaged, a grogshop is sure to be started to fill them with whisky and absorb their wages. When any of the employés become too lazy to work or too worthless to retain their places they are apt to go into the saloon business and depend upon their acquaintance among the railroad men for patronage and support. As things now are, a barrel of beer, a jug of whisky, and a little shanty are all that is necessary to starting a saloon and making men drunk. The requirement of an annual license fee of $500 will operate to close out three-fourths of these drunkard-factories. At most of the small way-stations and switches there would be no saloon at all; at other places, the depots and shops, there would be but one or two saloons with some personal responsibility where there are now one or two dozen with none. The opportunities, importunities, and temptations to drink would be reduced in the same proportion, and the improved sobriety of the employés would be a guarantee for increased care and vigilance, fewer accidents, and the saving of enormous sums now paid for damages.

The railroads are also pestered now with the bills, attachments, and garnishees served on them for the trust extended to their employés for liquor. Much of this annoyance would be spared to them, for there would no longer be the lively competition among the overnumerous saloons for custom, and the saloonkeeper who should be required to pay $500 a year for his privileges would not be prepared to take the risk of bad debts. The system of treating and "chalking-up" would cease almost entirely.

These reflections, which might be extended much further, make it the duty of the railroad managers, as a matter of self-interest, to use every legitimate means at their command to induce the Legislature now in session to pass a high-license bill. The measure will certainly be passed some day with an increase of the fee to $1,000, but the railroads may save hundreds of lives of passengers and employés and hundreds of thousands of dollars in the meantime if high-license legislation is effected now.

If the Illinois Legislature is bound hand and foot to the Liquor League, then it should accord the railroads some compensatory legislation. It should pass a bill releasing them from damages for any injury to passengers or freight growing out of the drunkenness of railroad employés, and it should acquit the companies of all liability for attachments and garnishees which represent in whole or in part bills for liquor. If the Legislature will give the railroads no protection against the outrageous abuses of the liquor traffic, then it should not make them liable for the criminal negligence of employés who, in violation of the rules, befog their brains in the dramshops.

THE CRY OF "HOT CORN."

There was a spasm of excitement on the Board of Trade yesterday, followed by earnest and outspoken indignation, which was caused by the "posting" of a small lot of corn as "hot" by the Illinois River Elevator. The circumstance led, of course, to rumors all over the country that the corn stored in the Chicago elevators—about 7,000,000 bushels—was ruined. This rumor resulted in a decline of two cents a bushel in New York, and large orders to sell which came from New York had the effect to depress the market one cent in this city, notwithstanding the real facts of the case were known here. The loss on the corn in Chicago alone amounted to nearly $70,000, and much more on the corn in transitu and in store elsewhere, besides the disturbance created in the business of the day.

There is abundant reason to believe that the "posting" of this corn was altogether unwarranted. The history of this small consignment, which amounts to less than 4,000 bushels in all, was told in THE TRIBUNE at the time it came to Chicago. It was shipped here by canal, and received into the Illinois River Elevator as "rejected," though it was notoriously in such a condition that it should not have been graded at all. It is believed that every other elevator in Chicago would have taken care of it, and in any case it was a small and isolated batch which in no wise affected the great bulk of corn now in store here, and furnished no indication whatever of the condition of corn generally. It was known in advance that the "posting" of this corn would produce precisely the result which followed, and it would have been vastly cheaper to dump the whole lot, or even ten times that quantity, into the river than to take a course which was bound to prejudice the entire trade. If this grain had been so much damaged as to be a total loss the loss would have amounted to only $1,800, whereas the loss to the trade through "posting" was many times that amount.

This is a case which would seem to demand some attention from the Board of Trade. On the face of the transaction the owners of the elevator acted within the law. That is to say, they had a legal right to receive the corn into their elevator as inspected by the State officers, and they had also the legal right to post the stuff when they found it was out of condition. But if there is sufficient evidence that anybody made use of the conditions which have been described to influence the market for personal advantages then the board will be able to take cognizance of the transaction. It is of the highest importance that the grain trade, which speculation makes particularly sensitive at all the principal entrepots, be protected against transactions calculated to influence the market improperly for individual profit, and the Board of Trade cannot afford to pass over any transaction which carries with it a suspicion of unfairness.

EFFECT OF THE DEFEAT ON THE AFFIRMATION BILL.

The division on the Bradlaugh-Affirmation bill in the British Parliament Thursday night has been a very serious blow to the Gladstone Ministry. It has impaired its usefulness in a great measure, and the period of collapse cannot be very long delayed. It would be immediately disastrous, and dissolution could not be delayed a month if the Tories were prepared to assume the responsibilities of office. On a more important measure, such as the Criminal-Procedure bill, the Bankrupt bill, or the City of London Government bill, the Tories of the House of Lords could easily bring about a crisis by the rejection of any portion embodying principles that the House of Commons had affirmed by any considerable majority.

But the Tory party is not prepared. As Lord Dunraven, one of its ablest members, says in the April Nineteenth Century, the party "machine" is in imperfect condition, the leaders have no positive policy, and are "uncomfortably conscious of some weakness and deficiency inherent in the party that paralyze its action." The party has no leaders. Sir Stafford Northcote is feeble and flaccid. The name given to him, "the grand old woman," in contradistinction to the "grand old man," as applied to Mr. Gladstone, fully expresses the feeling with which he is regarded by the English people and the impatient spirits of his party. Lord Salisbury is too radically reactionary, and the young men of the Tory party who, like Lord Randolph Churchill, Mr. Gibson, and Mr. Gorst, believe with Lord Dunraven that the Tory party must cease to be a party of negation, and must be ready to legislate when legislation is necessary, and must be prepared with good reasons to oppose radical changes proposed by the extreme wing of the opposing party, would but chafe under his leadership. The Gladstone Ministry will therefore retain power for some time longer—the term of its supremacy very much depends on the action of the factions by which it is supported.

These factions, the territorial Whigs and the Radicals, are as much opposed to each other as were Whig and Tory ten years ago. They have no interest in common. The Whigs tolerate and act with the Radicals in certain directions only on condition that Whig privileges and perquisits are respected, that the Whigs are to have the bulk of the good places under the Government, and that they will have a restraining influence on legislation. Hitherto, under the present Ministry, the Radicals have had nothing but promises and a few places as the result of their alliance. The extreme Whigs have deserted them on several occasions, notably on some provisions of the Irish Land act, the Ground Game act, and Thursday night on the Affirmation bill. The Radicals have been dissatisfied at this. They see that Mr. Gladstone is being quietly pushed aside by Sir William Harcourt, whom they detest, and there are unmistakable signs of revolt.

Mr. Labouchère, one of the ardent spirits among them who long ago advised a repudiation of the Whigs, has invited Harcourt and those who act with him to go over to the Tory camp, where he naturally belongs, and where his ambition to become the leader of a party would stand good chance of being gratified. Many others among the Radicals have no doubt felt like Mr. Labouchère, but they were patient. They hoped with John Morley and the Pall Mall Gazette that the present Parliament would be able to carry through a measure of Parliamentary reform which would give their party the vantage ground, and that it would be time enough to declare war on the Whigs when they were assured of their majority under an extended franchise and a more equitable system of representation.

It remains to be seen whether the Radicals of the Morley school will have patience under the last Whig desertion, or whether Mr. Labouchère's advice will be acted on.

If the latter course is pursued, Parliament will be dissolved; a fair issue will be put before the English people, and the leaders will take themselves to the camps to which they belong. Gladstone will of course disappear; not even his intense energy could carry him through another Mid-Lothian campaign. A Liberal party, led by Sir Charles Dilke or Mr. Chamberlain, will confront the Tory territorialist party, of which Harcourt and Hartington will be leaders. The reactionists may succeed at the next election, but their triumph will not be long-lived. During the last sixty years progressive ideas in England have had but temporary checks. The tide will flow on with stronger, swifter current after the dam has been broken.

CHEAP ORE OR CHEAP MEN!

A very gloomy state of affairs exists in the iron trade. One of the great iron manufacturers of Chicago, in an interview published in THE TRIBUNE yesterday, declares the outlook to be worse than it has been for many years. He admits that the men's wages are already so low that he does not see how they can live if they are put down lower. Still there is the sure alternative that if the cost of manufacture is not lowered his mills and those of the other Western ironmakers cannot compete with the Pennsylvania mills. And if the wages are reduced—well, says the President of the North Chicago Rolling-Mills, with a shudder that can be seen through the types, "There is more anxiety about the future in certain circles than people dare to imagine."

A great part of the trouble that confronts the industrial population with this terrible alternative of wages that will not support them or no wages at all President Potter lays in part to the account of the corners on the Board of Trade. "A few men manipulate the prices of the food of the workingmen, and create corners in wheat and meats, of which the laborer has to pay the cost."

With all that this great employer of labor has to say against corners we substantially agree. But it is not to be overlooked that the iron men have on their side been busily engaged in "cornering" as well as the Board-of-Trade men. Mr. Potter is obliged to advocate the system which compels every one of his workingmen whose deplorable condition he so sympathizingly—and we do not doubt sincerely—mourns to pay tribute to the syndicates which have cornered the anthracite-coal market, the iron-ore market, the woolen, cotton, linen, silk, earthenware, glass, paints, dyestuffs, clothing, leather, implements, lumber, and about everything the people use, in one way if not another. The iron industry is, in the East at least, seriously hampered by the want of cheap ore, but instead of giving the industry the relief of free raw material Congress, at the demand of the owners of some second-rate ore-mines, and against the protests of men like Abram S. Hewitt, helped to corner iron-ore. To make up to the ironmakers the cost to them of this corner on ore they are helped to a corner on what they make, and so it goes—iron, lumber, salt, coal, matches, dyes, chemicals, wool, clothes, the materials and tools of all industry, are more or less cornered by the tariff for the benefit of a few corporations and syndicates, and the workingmen pay the bill, as is proved by their increasing poverty.

The position of the iron manufacturers in this matter is just this: We won't give up the corners in iron, steel, tools, engines, and all the rest. We can, therefore, not have cheap ore, cheap wire, cheap lumber, cheap clothing, cheap salt. But we must have something cheap or else we must stop mills. Labor must give way. If the iron manufacture cannot have cheap ore it must have cheap men!

THE DECAY OF ENTHUSIASM.

The Rev. Dr. Potter, of Grace Church, New York, preached a sermon recently in which he uttered a great truth, which is now very generally unperceived, or else regarded with supreme indifference. He referred to the degrading influence of cynical criticism in life and letters, and declared that "there is no ardor now as there was sixty years ago, and no sympathy with those who are ardent," and that "the prevailing atmosphere is singularly discharged of high enthusiasms."

This is absolutely true, as any one may discover who takes the trouble to look about him, even in his own immediate circle of friends. It is not confined to age or sex, though it seems most offensive in the young, because youth is the time of all others for the display of ardor and enthusiasm. It is unquestionably due not to any influences of advancing civilization or to any change of environments, but to the wave of so-called culture which is just now sweeping over the land. The ardor, the enthusiasm, and the sentiment have not been destroyed. They cannot be, for they are inherent qualities. They are simply covered up, because it is now considered in bad form to be enthusiastic, to be natural, to display ardor, or to worship an ideal. It is only a fashion or an affectation which will ere long disappear, but just now it is not in good style to be enthusiastic or to betray any noble or generous emotion. The young person of the period either cultivates a languid indifference, manifest in manners as well as in expressions of belief, or becomes cynical on every occasion, manifesting a tendency either to mock at what is serious or to say sharp things about it, which of course is the easiest thing in the world to do. This tendency is shown in the criticism of literature and art. He is the favorit critic today who says smart and sharp things of a personal sort and makes himself merry at the expense of the author or the artist, not he who honestly examines the work to find its meaning and to pronounce upon its merits. It is still more strongly shown in social criticisms, which take the direction of ridiculing every display of emotion, of sentiment, or of naturalness. In the mixed society of today any person who should venture to confess to an ideal or manifest any noble enthusiasm would be the target for the jibes of the whole company. The conventional types of the time recognize each other with the least expression possible—a bare nod or motion of the body, possibly the lifting of eyebrow. The hearty greeting and the cordial shake of the hand are no longer in favor. They must appear dull, languid, indifferent, blasé on the one hand or cynical on the other. Should an unfortunate couple appear among them who have an enthusiasm for each other they are immediately singled out for sharp comment or ironical compliment. Should a wretched wight venture to display his enthusiasm on any subject or to express his belief in any ideal, he is submitted to a languid round of astonished comment or an uplifting of eyebrows and shrugging of shoulders expressive of contempt for the igorance of the person or of pity for his mental status. There is no subject that these people fear to grapple with. It is possible, for instance, in a modern gathering, to hear Carlyle dismissed with a smart epigram and Emerson disposed of by a shrug, and yet it is quite generally conceded by those competent to judge that these two men possessed genius, and that their utterances are too far-reaching to be properly judged at present. That is a work for posterity. But we have plenty of young persons and some old ones who feel themselves qualified to pronounce upon them on the instant, without ever studying them. The trouble with these two men was that they had enthusiasms. They are consequently out of the fashion. Their walks and talks in the solitude of Craigenputtock are not comprehensible according to the languid canons of modern indifference. Jane Carlyle's letters of complaint, however, are proper. They are the thing, for their tendency is to show us not Carlyle the prophet, but Carlyle the man in his everyday fault-finding, churlishness, and moroseness. There is more today known about his dyspepsia than there is about his writings, and Mrs. Carlyle's jealousy of Lady Ashburton's attentions to her husband is the only episode in the life of this unhappy man and woman which is thoroughly appreciated, because it is a blow at enthusiasms.

The case, however, is not a hopeless one, because the absence of enthusiasms is only an affectation, but it is still to be regretted because it hinders the development of what is high, and noble, and true, because it gives a false direction to literature and art, because it conceals the seriousness, reality, and lofty aims of life, and crushes out all those impulses and enthusiasms without which no great things can be accomplished. The great deeds of the world have always been the result of sentiment joined with enthusiasm. So long, however, as these two qualities are smothered under the indifference of an artificial and superficial culture it is useless to hope for great achievements in art and literature, or if they should be accomplished there is little danger they will be appreciated.

STRAWBERRIES FOR BEEF.

The attractions of the Chicago markets for housekeepers, already second to none in the country, are likely to be very greatly increased by the enterprise of the South Carolina Railway. That road has made a five-years contract with a refrigerator-car company of Atlanta to run fruit trains to this city. It is expected to make the run to Chicago in seventy-six hours, and to other Western points in corresponding time. This arrangement its Superintendent says he considers the most important enterprise that has been started during his connection with the road. The fruits and vegetables of the Carolinas and Georgia will be delivered in perfect condition in Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, and Indianapolis, and from this place they will be shipped throughout the entire Northwest.

Truck-farming in the South to supply the Atlantic coast cities is growing to be a most important industry. The opening of the Western market to the truck-farmers of South Carolina and Georgia cannot fail to prove a fortunate thing. The great bane of the South has always been the monotony of its agriculture. Its planters have apparently been unable to free themselves from the fascination of great plantations devoted to two or three staples of export. But with the disappearance of slavery and the breaking up of the great estates that grew up with it a new era has begun.

Land in the vicinity of Charleston on which garden-truck is raised to be shipped North on the coast steamers has done so well that some of it sells for as much as $1,200 an acre. The amount of land along the railroads that is adapted to this profitable business is practically unlimited. Hitherto Chicago, which has an unappeasable appetite for these dainties of early vegetables and choice fruits, and has plenty of money to pay for them, has had but a limited supply, on account of the lack of transportation facilities. The action of the South Carolina Railway opens new fields to our capacious maws. The more we buy from the South the more we will be able to sell to it. It is part of the plan that the cars which bring us the melons and strawberries of South Carolina shall carry back our dressed beef. One of the benefits of this mutually advantageous interchange ought to be to lead to an extension of the trade of this city with the South. Charleston has as fine a harbor as any below New York, and its business-men have for years been seeking to establish a more direct rail connection with Chicago. They would like to do a part of our export business to Europe, and to take their pay in our manufactures.

WOODEN STOOPS ON STONE HOUSES.

At no previous period of its growth were there so many handsome houses going up in Chicago as this year. The Queen City of the Lakes is in her palace-building age, as Venice was at the climax of her fortune, when "she held the gorgeous East in fee and was the safeguard of the West." But it is questionable if our Doges' palaces survive in the admiration of coming ages as do those to which the gondolier of the Grand Canal guides the American visitor to the Queen of the Adriatic.

Chicago architecture is ambitious, and our architects are fully able to embody the social zeal and the personal estheticism of their clients in forms of enduring beauty, but there are some eccentricities in our local style that always manage to crop out at just the critical moment and spoil what was going to be "the finest thing in houses" west of New York. One of these eccentricities is the inexplicable mania for putting wooden stoops on stone houses. A man will begin the erection of a home on the most generous scale. The architect, happy in the thought that here at last is a client who means to do the thing right, is given carte blanche. Chicago stone is not good enough. A more expensive and gorgeous material is imported from Lake Superior or Pennsylvania. Plate glass, hard woods, carvings in stone and woods are lavished on the pile. It grows before the eyes of the passer-by and the proud architect as a thing of beauty. The liberal owner draws his check without a grumble whenever he is called upon. He submits in the most gentlemanly manner to the extras which every architect and builder who understands business will succeed in making his clients pay. All goes well until the inevitable day comes when the architect hears the old, old query: "Now, don't you think a wooden stoop would do on this house?"

This petering out of the sense of the fitness of things and faltering of the determination to have things just right at the precise moment that the front stoop is reached is one, as far as we know, peculiar to this city. This idiosyncrasy of the Chicago mind is well worth the study of the intelligent foreigner who next visits us for the purpose of serving us up in a literary ragout. This fatal truncation of the architectural cone, this wooden climax of a poem in stone, is not due to want of enterprise or want of money. Probably it is the Chicago way of manifesting that humility the lack of which is popularly supposed to be one of our special characteristics. The proud owner of the magnificent pile on the avenue suddenly realizes at the last moment that he is going pretty close to putting on airs. He does not want to get himself disliked "by the boys." To show that he is still the humble chap he used to be before corn went up, he rounds off his mansion with a simple board stoop.

The trouble with the humility theory of the wooden stoop on the stone house is that it is these very houses which are almost certain to thrust up into the sky a pretentious gable with nothing behind it, a kind of architectural way of getting credit on false pretenses. A gable exists in architecture as a graceful way of ending a real wing or projection. But a favorit use of it in Chicago is to put forward the mere gable as a substitute for the wing. It stands up bravely as if it were something; look behind it and you will see that it is nothing but a sham. Even churches which are supposed to live only for the inculcation of the highest form of rectitude and truthtelling do not shrink from this architectural lie.

Putting wooden stoops on stone houses is bad enough, but there is one thing that is worse: that is to put a wooden stoop on a stone house and then disguise it with paint so that it will pass muster with your near-sighted and non-observant friends as a stone stoop. If your money, or your nerve, or your love of display gives out when the stoop of your palace is reached, and a wooden stoop becomes the prelude that invites your friends to enter the more substantial glories beyond, at least let it be an honest stoop not ashamed to seem what it is. And if there is nothing to put a gable in front of, leave the gable off.

THE story of the designing young English woman who induced a curate to give her a "holy kiss," and had an instantaneous photograph taken of him at the moment of that interesting act, calls to mind a similar trick played on Mr. Chamberlain, President of the English Board of Trade. When Mr. Forster resigned the Irish Secretaryship there was expectation in some quarters that Mr. Chamberlain would be named to fill the place. The Irish members of Parliament were delighted, and delegated one of their number, Mr. Callan, whose convivial proclivities are well known, to "coach" the expected appointee in all the ins and outs of Irish policy as viewed from the Land-League platform. This Mr. Callan did, and for several days stuck to Mr. Chamberlain closer than a brother. Watching his opportunity, a photographer one day managed to take a capital picture of them as they paused for a moment in front of his office, engaged in eager conversation and arm-in-arm. Had Mr. Chamberlain really been appointed the picture would have been published and sent broadcast over the country with the inscription: "The New Irish Policy—The Chief Secretary and His Confidential Adviser," to the great delight of the Tories.

[LONDON Truth.]—Lady Gordon-Cathcart has set a good example to other Highland proprietors in her treatment of her crofters on the Outer Hebrides—Barra and Uist—having recently promised to give a present of $500 to every family who would emigrate to Canada, of $125 on departure and $375 on arrival at Manitoba, or wherever they pleased to settle. Ten families left last week, and some more followed this. They are in charge of Mr. McDermid, the factor on the estate, who last year visited Canada in order to judge whether it was a suitable country for such people. Lady Gordon-Cathcart also took over the holdings and stock of the emigrants at a valuation, the amounts paid varying from $200 to $600.

When the crofter families are chased out and departed from their old Scotch homes to Manitoba, Lady Gordon will cover their little farms with deer and grouse to rent out the grounds to sportsmen for shooting and hunting. Deer-stalking and partridge-shooting are more important to the British nobility than raising Scotchmen for the ranks of their regiments or the navigation of their ships.

THE concession just made by Turkey to Austria's demand for permission to construct a railway southward through Servia to meet the line which already stretches upward from the Ægean coast across the southern half of Turkey proper is, if truly reported, as striking a novelty as China's recent patronage of overland telegraphs. All civilized appliances save those of war are looked upon by the orthodox Turk with nothing short of horror. "Why should we make roads?" said a Turkish official to a traveler in Palestine, "just to help the foreigners in overrunning our country?" This definition might certainly be applied by any thinking Osmanli to a railroad extending over the whole breadth of Turkey from the border of her ancient antagonist, Austria, to a district coveted by her hereditary and implacable enemy, Greece. The stipulation that a certain important strategic pass should be avoided by the projected line shows in what spirit Turkey's consent has been given, and proves that the Sultan has done right, not from any sense of duty, but because he could not help it.

SPEAKING of the useless division of English lawyers into solicitors and barristers, kept up for the purpose of robbing clients, the editor of the London Truth says:

> I would suggest to the association to bring in a bill enabling solicitors to conduct their clients' cases in all courts of law. Were this permitted, not only would solicitors gain, but the litigating public. In an important case some distinguished barrister would be briefed, but there are hundreds of cases in which a sharp solicitor would do as well if not better than a barrister. The client has to explain his case to his solicitor. The latter has to examine it. Having mastered it he then has, in a lengthy brief and in a series of consultations, to make it clear to a barrister, who then—with the solicitor sitting by his side—has to expound it in court. No country which is not lawyer-ridden would submit to so wasteful an absurdity.

YOU would not expect a man to fly into a furious passion because another man drank his health, but this is just what happened the other day to a prominent merchant of Portland, Ore. It seems that he is noted far and wide for his charitable disposition, and this is how it happened, as told by the Oregonian: Regularly twice a week for the last two months a respectable and honest-looking man has applied to him for 25 cents to buy "his only meal that day." The two bits were always cheerfully given and thankfully received. Desiring to learn where his ward dined, the merchant one day followed him, saw him go into an unlicensed dive, call up a friend, order two whisky straights, and propose this toast: "Here's to the little white-headed man that puts up for this."

THE Detroit Evening News of May 1 contains a description of what it declares to be the richest salt bed in the United States, situated at Marine City, in St. Clair County, Mich. It will doubtless be safe to take this announcement cum grano salis, but the evidence presented by the News certainly indicates a vast deposit of fine transparent salt. The ascertained depth of the bed is said to be 115 feet, and it may be much greater, for at that point the drill was stopped. The last twelve months have been remarkable for discoveries of salt, and evidently the world is in no immediate danger of losing its savor.

THE only motive of the Connecticut Senate, says the Springfield Republican, during the session just closed has been the locomotive. The "conductor" of the body was a railroad President, and under his successful management the Short-Haul bill was killed, a railroad veto overridden, the grades-crossings prohibition reduced to little more than a joke, and the reduction of railroad taxation, which seemed impossible, has been accomplished. There is a pile of indignation all over the State at the conduct of the Legislature, but what good will that do? If there is one thing your average legislator doesn't care anything for, it is "popular indignation."

[LONDON Truth.]—If ever a man thoroughly deserved being hanged it is Brady, but it does not follow that there are not persons who still more merit this fate. It is impossible to read the Dublin trial without the strongest regret that the Government has found it necessary to allow Carey to become an informer. Of all the members of the gang that the police laid their hands upon he seems to be the greatest scoundrel. He was in a superior position to the others; he it was who tempted them; he was a hypocrit making special professions of religion, and no sooner were he and his instruments caught than he turned traitor.

SAM COLLIER, the veteran pugilist, is applying for a patent for a swimming-machine. The Philadelphia Times has discovered that for many weeks his workshop over the saloon of Michael Cleary, at Eighth and Vine streets, has resounded with hammer strokes, and frequently the fighter banged on the floor with strange implements for hours at a time. Occasionally he would emerge, covered with shavings, to take his meals, and he invariably remarked that he was on the road to fortune. Thursday Mr. Collier announced that his work was done. His listeners tumbled over each other to get up-stairs, and they found "Collier's Improved Automatic Swimmer." Small screw propellers are placed on each foot, and they are revolved by the wearer kicking out vigorously. Mr. Collier has experimented in a bathtub with great success, and when the weather is warmer he will give exhibitions in the Delaware.

NEWSTEAD ABBEY has thrice changed hands since it became the property of Lord Byron. It was sold, with the estate, by the poet to Mr. Clawton for $700,000, and resold by the latter in 1818 to Col. Wildman for $475,000. The Colonel left no issue, and the estate was sold after his death to Capt. Webb, the present owner, who it is understood would entertain a reasonable offer to purchase. The place has been vastly improved since Byron's time, when it was in a miserable plight.

THE value of the chief art collections of Paris is estimated as follows: The Duc d'Aumale, $15,000,000; the Baron de Rothschild, $10,000,000; Sir Richard Wallace, $8,000,000; M. Secretan, $2,000,000, including thirty pictures by Meissonier; M. Defoer-Bey and the Count de Greffuble, each $600,000; Madame Cossin, $1,000,000; and M. Edouard Andre and Mr. William Stewart, $400,000 each.

THE Hon. Thomas W. Palmer, Michigan's new United States Senator, is said by Michigan politicians of experience to be a cultivated and refined gentleman, who will make one of the ablest representatives that State has ever sent to Washington.

THE trade in idols is unusually brisk in Birmingham, England. A thousand glass gods, which cost 37 cents apiece and sell for $4, have just been sent to Burmah.

LAKESIDE MUSINGS.

"Much Ado About Nothing" was played at the Cincinnati Dramatic Festival Wednesday night. Once in a while a really appropriate drama is presented.

Count Sawa of Japan reached New York last Thursday. The Count's name would indicate that he had come over to help Courtney out in his next boat-race.

An exchange says that whistling to a piano accompaniment is a new whim of New York society belles. As people cannot talk while whistling, the idea is not such a bad one.

Henry Ward Beecher says: "If you want to look for heroes in our day you must go down to the kitchen." You must also go down there if you want to look for policemen after 9 o'clock p. m.

The Rev. R. S. Cantine, of this city, preached a scathing sermon last Sunday against dancing. Mr. Cantine should not allow the memory of having stepped on some young lady's train to embitter his whole life.

George T. Shaw stole $3,500 from All Souls' Church, New York, of which he was Treasurer, and spent it all on a young woman who played Patience in a comic opera company. Nemesis doesn't seem to be losing a trick this season.

The New York dispatches state that Salmi Morse has written a play entitled "A Bustle Among Petticoats." If Mr. Morse were an earnest and thoughtful student he would have learned ere this that the bustle is not among the petticoats, but is launched and towed into position after the petticoats are all on.

A foreign journal says that the Viscountess de Courval's toilet, at a recent reception in Paris, "had the train and bodice of pale grayish-blue lampas, covered with large gold flowers; the tablier was ivory satin, trimmed with gold guipure; the high bodice, crossed with folds en fichu, disclosed flots of ivory and gold lace, and it was fastened slantwise with large diamond buttons: gold lace ruffles to the elbow sleeves; long tan Suede gloves, a bouquet of diamonds in the hair fastening an aigret of blue feathers powdered with gold." It is believed that the Viscount's schedule in bankruptcy will hardly be as elaborate as this.

  Breathing the wine like air;
And glittering arrows of sunshine
  Falling upon her hair.
The fragrance of trailing arbutus,
  Floating like incense past,
And words that my tongue longs to utter Breaking their bars at last.

They say she is proud as the angels,
  Fallen through pride—their sin,
And stately and cold as the icebergs
  Binding the North Seas in.
And yet, when I whisper, "I love you,"
  Blushes like waves of light
Are flashing as brilliant auroras
  Over an arctic night.

"I love you, my darling, I love you,"
  Always love's speech the same,
And higher, surmounting her forehead
  Blazes the crimson flame.
Then slowly the curtains are lifted,
  Veiling her shining eyes,
And there, 'mid the lights and the shadows,
  Captive again, Love lies.

"Kiss me, darling."

Richard Irwin had toiled slowly and wearily up the two flights of stairs which led to the poor abode, whose scanty furniture had grown still more scanty as want and poverty clutched with iron grip his whole existence, as if they would throttle even the faint ray of hope that sometimes sprang up in his heart, and looked long and lovingly into the pale but beautiful face of the girl who had given up parents, home, and everything that had made life happy, to become his wife. And as she stood there, her soft white arms twined lovingly around his neck, and her deep hazel eyes upraised to his, he saw that she had been weeping, and around the wan drooping lips that in the happy bygone days were so often raised, pouting merrily the while, to be kissed by his own, there were traces of pie.

Richard Irwin shuddered as he drew the lithe, yielding form still more closely to him, and as her head nestled confidingly on his clavicle his face was bent forward and he wept bitter, scalding tears of pain to think that his wife, Clytie Stiggins, Boston born and bred—a girl who habitually read Emerson, and whose essay on the theory of horizontal cleavage in red sandstone was only excelled by her paper on the fauna of the pliocene period—should be reduced to eating pie in the morning.

"You are suffering, my darling," she said. "Can you not tell me, your wife, of your sorrow?"

But mastering his emotions in an instant, he turned again to Clytie. "It is of no use, sweetheart," he said. "I have walked the streets for weeks vainly searching for work. Winter is coming on, and what is to become of us is more than I know."

"It is always darkest before the dawn, my precious," she murmured, "and, no matter what betide, I have you"—and drawing his face to hers she kissed him in a wild, passionate, grab-the-chair-if-you-want-to-stay-there manner that reminded him of early days on the North Side.

"But you can't eat me," he began, and then stopped suddenly, saying softly to himself: "I don't know. It might come to that. Lemon pie in the morning"—and he sank into a chair.

Just then a noise as of some one dragging himself slowly and wearily up the stairs was heard. Presently it ceased, and a messenger-boy kicked open the door, and walking to where Richard Irwin sat handed him a telegram. He tore open the envelope with trembling hands and read the message, the boy looking over his shoulder to see that everything was all right.

"We are saved, Clytie," he said, in low, broken tones. "Your father is dead, and all his mackerel fishery is yours."

"Yes," murmured the girl, kneeling beside the chair on which her husband sat. "We are saved, Richard—saved by acanthopterygian fish of the scomberoid family. Its body is fusiform, its first dorsal fin continuous, and its branchiostegal rays are seven in number"—and then, looking up suddenly, she saw that the man she loved so well, and for whom she would have sacrificed her life, was lying cold and pulseless across the chair.

PERSONALS.

A statue of Lamartine is to be erected by subscription, and each subscriber is to receive a lock of the poet's hair, a crop of which was gathered by M. Ysopy, for twenty years the poet's barber and haircutter!

A most interesting private correspondence between Thackeray and his mother has just been rescued from the curiosity-shops by the editor of a leading London magazine. One of the letters was offered to this gentleman for [illegible] He went in search of the person from whom [illegible] offer came and insisted upon knowing how he got possession of the letter. After a little trouble he learned that the man, who was a dealer in second-hand furniture, had bought an old writing-desk which belonged to Thackeray when he lived in Onslow Square. In a drawer of this writing-desk, locked up and without a key, the dealer found about a hundred letters, most of them written to Thackeray by his mother, and many other interesting private memoranda. The dealer finally agreed to part with the whole collection for £100, and upon getting possession of them the editor turned them over to Thackeray's daughter, Mrs. Ritchie.

The Crown Prince of Germany is an earnest Freemason, and recently delivered an address before the Royal York Lodge, in Berlin, which caused a great sensation and drew forth much comment. The burden of his remarks was that Freemasons should be more progressive, and that instead of clinging to old traditions, whose only importance is their antiquity, they should distinguish themselves by being in the foremost rank of seekers after new and living truths.

Florence Marryat says that when Dickens was writing "David Copperfield," and at a time when its publication in a serial form was about half completed, an American firm procured somebody to write a conclusion, and thus put a bogus book on the market. This version of the story married David to Agnes rather abruptly. Dickens had intended the same thing, but when the news of this audacious piracy reached him he forthwith introduced Dora, and made her David's wife with as little delay as possible.

Here Stood the Residence of
JOHN HANCOCK,
A Prominent and Patriotic
Merchant of Boston, the First
Signer of the Declaration of American Independence, and
First Governor of Massachusetts
Under the State Constitution.

Erected 1737. Removed 1863.

Brown and Coffin both wanted the appointment as Clerk of a Nantucket court. It was desirable for each to obtain certain signatures in New Bedford. They breakfasted as usual at the same hotel, and separated with an air of mutual innocence. Then Brown hurriedly embarked for New Bedford in the only available sailboat. Coffin drove furiously to a point where he could also get a craft. After a brisk race, the yachtsmen came to a place where the tide and wind were dead against them. Coffin then chartered a steamer, and exultantly completed his journey; but on arriving in New Bedford he found that Brown had got ahead of him by train, thus securing the office.

A young lady in Chicago has some very practical ideas about missionary work. She is a student in the Female Missionary Training School, and is not yet 20 years of age. It has been her practice for the last few months to visit the sick and destitute in the lowest and vilest slums of Chicago, entirely alone, at all hours of the day. The little figure dressed modestly in black is known and respected by the criminal classes of the city, and in all her errands of mercy she has never once been molested or even insulted. She says her object is first of all to do some practical good and next to fit herself for actual experience for her life-work as a missionary. Wiser people than this young girl have gone through life without getting as near the ideal of Christianity.—N. Y. Tribune.

Mrs. Lowell, the wife of the American Minister, says the London Truth, is in very delicate health, and was not able to go to court last season. This year, however, she resolved to run the risk of attending the first drawing-room, but was obliged to apply for a dispensation in some small matter of costume. The Queen, besides assenting to Mrs. Lowell's request, sent her a private message that she was on no account to come to the drawing room unless she received the permission of her medical advisers, and that, if they could not sanction her attendance at the palace, her Majesty would have much pleasure in paying her a visit at the legation. Mrs. Lowell was so much pleased at the Queen's friendly sympathy that, in order to testify her appreciation, she attended both drawing-rooms.

Dr. Siemens, the great electrician, who has now been made Sir William Siemens, F. R. S., D. C. L., LL. D., Ph. D., of Sherwood, near Tunbridge Wells, and of Palace houses, Kensington Gardens and Queen Anne's Gate, S. W., is a son of the late Mr. Ferdinand Siemens, of Hanover, by Eleanor, daughter of Mr. F. Deichmann, also of Hanover. He was born in 1823, was educated at the University of Göttingen, and married, in 1859, Anne, daughter of Mr. Joseph Gordon, W. S., of Edinburg. Sir William is President of the British Association and Chairman of the Council of the Society of Arts; he has been President of the Institute of Mechanical Engineers, of the Society of Telegraph Engineers, the Iron and Steel Institute, the Birmingham and Midland Institute, etc., and he is an active member of the Council of the Institute of Civil Engineers.

Some controversy having arisen as to the circumstances of the Empress Eugénie's last day at the Tuileries, a lady writes to a London paper her experiences. She had gone to seek M. de Valabrégne, chamberlain in waiting. The porter had directed her to that official's rooms. She went up-stairs without meeting a soul. Not a sound was heard through the long corridors, which were filled with narrow doors, each bearing a card with the name of the occupant. Many of the doors were open, and the wind had scattered the papers. Cupboards had been ransacked, and drawers dragged out to their fullest extent. All kinds of débris were lying loose upon the ground! She called the name of her friend, but no answer came, and the name echoed through the corridor with lugubrious effect. The lady declares her solemn belief that every soul had taken flight before the Empress herself departed. Overcome with alarm, the lady descended to find the loge itself empty. During her search the porter, too, had gone.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The Ginori porcelain-works at Florence, established 150 years ago, employ 1,000 workmen, and supply a fine income to the Ginori family, who live in the palace which overlooks the works, built in 1420 by one of the family.

Considerable interest was aroused by the recent sale in Paris of Alfred de Musset's papers, which sold for $4,685. Among them was a sketchbook illustrating scenes in his famous trip to Italy with George Sand for his companion.

The Duc de Talleyrand-Perigord, Prince of Chalais, who died recently in Paris, closing a long career of almost unexampled philanthropy and unostentatious benevolence, recommended himself with his last breath "to the silence of the press."

The Fortnightly Review asserts that France at the present day has a better equipped and more completely organized army than any other country in the world. With the 400,000 volunteers upon which she can rely, the number of troops at her disposal is 3,700,000 men, so that she "now can look on the future without fear."

The coöperative stores flourish in England, although they do not seem to be a success in this country. The statistics of sales show a great increase, from 2,333,523 in 1862 to 20,901,273 in 1881. Capital to the amount of $31,599,350 is now invested in the 1,000 coöperative establishments there, which number 599,879 members in all.

It is announced that the summer theatre and promenade at Nice, which was destroyed by fire April 4, will be rebuilt. Work was commenced on these buildings in 1880, and they were not quite finished when burned down. They consisted of a handsome theatre, ball-room, billiard-saloon, restaurant, etc., surrounded by a broad promenade, built at some distance from land in the harbor at Nice, and designed to combine every attraction of pleasure resorts, fresh air, and beautiful scenery.

The French Government has recently concluded a treaty with the Kingdom of Baol, providing protection and military support when required, while pledging itself not to interfere with the constitution or internal affairs of the little kingdom. Baol in return guarantees every facility for the construction throughout the country of railroads, telegraphs, and military stations by the French, and promises to close the country against all the enemies of France. The new "protectorate" is the extreme western country in Africa, in the Valley of the Senegal, opposit the Cape Verde Islands.

The annual distribution of prizes in the French Academie des Sciences took place at its last meeting, and thirty-four medals, ranging in value from $100 to $2,000, were awarded to the various scientists of the world who in 1882 did most to aid the progress of science according to the judgment of the Academie. Dr. Pasteur, for his germ theories and experiments on charbon, hydrophobia, etc., and de Brazza, for his explorations in Africa, were each presented with a medal, for the second or third time, and Dr. Toussaint also received one for his method of rendering bacteria harmless by heating them. Another was sent to two young scientists for their valuable experiments on the transmission of consumption, practiced on monkeys, from which they proved that consumption can not only be transmitted by inheritance and inoculation, but by cohabitation. Another was awarded to Capt. de la Grye for his various contributions to astronomical and nautical science, among which was his survey of the coast of New Caledonia several years ago, which occupied three years. During this time he had no shelter but a small open boat, as he and his ten companions could not venture to land openly on account of the cannibals, and their good ship, the Aventure, had been wrecked. The name of no scientist of this country was on the list.

AN OPEN LETTER.

The following letter from F. H. Tubbs, Esq., Superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Company in Chicago, explains itself:

CHICAGO, April 9, 1883.—F. L. Peiro, M. D.—My Dear Sir: After my precarious illness—that violent attack of lung-fever through which you so successfully brought me—a certain irritable bronchial difficulty remained, attended by a harassing cough, which, in my extremely debilitated condition, proved exceedingly annoying and oppressive. It was for this condition I began the inhalation of your "Oxygen," and from its speedy action in removing this cough and restoring my strength I certainly believe it is as remarkable in results as it is pleasant to use. Each inhalation was attended with such peaceful, quiet effect that one feels a desire for continuing it, and indisposition to stop inhaling it.

I should think the Oxygen simply indispensable to mental-worn, tired, and weary business-men, who become so from constant and exacting duties. It completely restores nervous energy and adds new zest to life and work. In my case it has proven a blessing. I am, Doctor, very sincerely yours,

F. H. TUBBS.

Another Card from Thaddeus Hyatt.

Further Caution to Owners of Property, Architects, and Ironmen.

I took occasion to remark, in my card published in the Tribune of the 11th inst.: That the Cleveland decision had not given carte blanche to infringers; that the patent was still valid; and that "the rights of the patantee under it would be still enforced by all legal means."

The Cleveland affair took place on the 14th February past. On the 25th April present, a decree was made by Judge Truax in the Superior Court (a copy of which will be found below), from which it will be seen that my words were true, and that defaulting licenses get from the Cleveland decision were no more carte blanche than non-licensees to infringe the patent. And, in this connection, I would like to add (but for the seeming invidiousness of the observation), that the policy and the logic of the Ten Commandments appear to be just as sound today as they ever were.

THADDEUS HYATT.
April 30, 1883. 231 Broadway, New York.

A PRESCRIPTION

FOR DYSPEPSIA.

Certain harmless, rational, and most agreeable of all, no drugs necessary. By complying with the following suggestions all the symptoms of dyspepsia, such as distress of stomach, nervousness, insomnia, languidness, sick headache, heartburn, etc., etc., will disappear, the sufferer will again be cheerful, able to fulfill his duties, and to enjoy life. Thousands have been profited already, and many thousands more can be made happy also. Now for the prescription:

Breakfast—A slice or two of toast or oatmeal or cracked wheat, a cup of coffee or tea (if desired), and a glass of Arend's Kumyss.

Dinner—A moderate piece of lean beef or mutton, a mealy potato or two, a little bread, and a glass of Arend's Kumyss.

Supper—No solid food whatever, simply one or two glasses of Arend's Kumyss. A glass of Kumyss may also be taken on retiring. Most people sleep better on it.

Though this regimen of diet may seem scant to such as are in the habit of satisfying their appetite (not distinguishing between appetite and hunger), yet scientific investigation and experience has proved that it is sufficient for all but hard laborers. With above diet the dyspeptic grows fleshy, ruddy, hearty, where on a richer diet he stays poor, weak, and sickly. One week's trial will tell the story and prove the logic of above suggestions. If you do not know what Arend's Kumyss is you can have a treatise thereon mailed to you, gratis, by addressing

LONDON LIFE.

The Social Season Begun, and Everybody in Town Again.

Rich Men's Dwellings and the Manner in Which They Are Conducted.

LONDON, April 21.—[Special Correspondence.]—Everybody is in town. The London season is in full swing. The week has been eventful. Dinners, dances, dynamite trials have crowded one upon the other with the rush of mighty waters. This has been the opening week of the society season. London is an epitome of the world. It is the metropolis of the nineteenth century. In comparison with London all other Capitals are provincial. Paris is, as everybody knows, gay and gushing. It is a jolly place for a recreation-day. It is more. It has art and artists as well as science and learning. But Paris has its limitations and is essentially French in its type. It is only French.

London is the world. The peoples and customs of all European States are to be found in London; indeed, the peoples and customs of Asia, Africa, and America as well. Between Charing Cross and Ludgate Hill on the Strand, and Fleet street, one jostles against Jew and Greek, Roman and barbarian. One may drop into a German restaurant, French café, or Austrian pastry-shop. One may dine in London from 12 noon till 12 midnight, after the fashion of any people of the earth, from semi-civilized to civilized, at fixed prices from sixpence to a guinea.

HYDE PARK AND SWELL HOUSES.

Hyde Park is a charming, exhilarating, care-allaying spot on a bright spring day. This third week in April the trees and hedges, the foliage and flowers are at their best. The greensward of the entire park is as soft to the tread as velvet.

If one takes Charing Cross or Piccadilly Circus as the centre of modern London, then one is within ten or fifteen minutes' walk of Hyde Park corner. Hyde Park is unlike any other public ground in the world. It combines vast open spaces, old, enormous trees, carefully-made and exquisitly-tended roads, old straggling footpaths, with flowerbeds, fountains, statuary, and numerous public monuments. It is the very centre of the homes of the aristocracy, the princes of wealth, and the princesses of fashion. At the Hyde Park end of Piccadilly, and then stretching away for miles in Kensington are the town-houses of the great and powerful. In these families the yearly expenditure is from four to twenty thousand pounds. The manner of living is the most refined as well as the most luxurious this world has ever known.

For the most part these homes are very plain externally; some of them of the simplest construction of the common ugly block bricks. Others are plastered and painted a modified white. But the inside of these houses is the home of comfort and wealth of appointment. In a house of from twelve to twenty rooms there would be as many servants. In a small establishment there would be always a butler, cook, housekeeper, lady's-maid, valet, house-maid, parlor-maid, scullery-maid, coachman, footman, hallman, and page. Where there are small children there would be a governess, and where there are youths there would be a tutor.

These servants are perfectly trained in their work, their morals, and their manners. Each has his or her work. It is precisely defined and, as a rule, conscientiously done.

From 11 a. m. till 1 p. m. these people, young and old, ride in Hyde Park, and then again after luncheon from 4 to 6 they drive. This week the park is full. The families are all back, and society wishes to be seen and to see.

Three handsome men and beautiful young ladies in their saddles or carriages wish it to be known that they are in town and are ready for a dinner or a dance, a kettle-drum or a tennis party.

The equipages are not gorgeous, but are magnificent—the carriages of all shapes and sizes; the teams, tandem and four-in-hand; and the lackeys are in figure and feature gentlemen. In the smallest families no man-servant is under six feet in hight, and from page-boy up is selected for his capacity first, but good looks and fine figure are requisits. These lackeys are in luminous attire. In the noble families, of course, the livery is peculiar to the house.

ENGLISH CHILDREN AND GOOD BREEDING.

The English are a handsome race. There are the evidences of many generations of good blood and good breeding. What splendid physiques the men have! What perfect complexions the women have! The humid, soft climate of England has much to do, very much to do, with the superb health of the nation. But there are other factors that are very potential in this result.

English children are trained to consider health a prime consideration in life, and they are kept simple, sweet, innocent, dutiful children long beyond the age when most American children would be the masters and mistresses of the household. Undutifulness in an English child is a heinous sin, and brings remorse and usually sincere penitence. Till youths are out in the world for themselves they consider themselves subject to the law of the family, and unquestioning obedience for them is that law. It is almost unknown in a well-ordered English home for a child to even express a wish except in a negative form, and never to "answer back." This training explains not only the mighty self-control, the phenomenal reserve power, and the universal self-respect of the English people, but it is the very foundation of their superb and abounding health.

Till the children are well into their teens they take their meals in the nursery, for the most part, and are taught to eat the plainest food for health's sake. It is the rule in many families for the children to breakfast with the adult members of the family and to dress for dinner and come to the table for the dessert. In this latter case it is very charming to see the youths of both sexes come into the dining-room, greet the guests with sweetest simplicity, stand about the chairs of the father and mother and take such dessert as is passed to them.

PRETTY GIRLS.

No wonder the old Pope, seeing a lot of English children near the Vatican in Rome, said one day: "They are not English, they are angels." These English girls in Hyde Park, in saddle, in carriage, or on foot, are the loveliest creatures on earth. No paint, no powder, no primping. Sweet in their simplicity, modest as fawns, and yet with moral strength to remove mountains. These English girls are not graceful, as either French or American would count gracefulness. Their waists are not in tight corsets, nor are their feet in tight shoes. These abominations to them are in the category with paint, powder, and primping—they are vulgar, for vulgar minds and breeding.

The present writer has on one occasion counted thirty-nine clear, beautiful complexions out of forty that casually passed. As a rule, English women, especially of the upper classes would, seven out of every ten, have brilliant and in every way beautiful complexions. Of course most English girls of these classes are blonde. They are always simply attired and few unmarried English women wear jewelry of any description. No English children are ever seen with jewelry upon their persons. American children are more conspicuous in London, by reason of their pronounced manners and adult-dressing than are their parents, as they walk Regent street or Piccadilly, or dine in the great hotels. Boys of 15 and 16 in England wear the garments suited to their age. If not working lads, if the sons of gentlemen, they usually wear the Eton jacket and broad collar. It is in striking contrast to their boyish dress and bearing to meet an American youth of the same age with coat, standing collar, billy-cock hat, scarf and pin, and rings on his fingers. Perhaps these are small matters, and perhaps they are very momentous matters. It is not the question alone of what a child may wear, but it is the deep and vital question of the spirit and temper beneath the garments. In all lands and ages there have been distinctions made in the attire suitable to children and that suitable to adults. America is doing away with these distinctions in the outward symbols, because Americans are doing away very rapidly with the thing signified. This one testimony is borne by all travelers in American: there are no American children. The children are all men and women." They are overstimulated by their habits of publicity, society, diet, dressing, and unguarded reading habits.

The writer knows instances of American boys coming to England to enter the public schools or colleges at the age of 15 whose academic work was not equal to that of English boys of 10 or 12, but who had read all the dime novels that flood the railroad stations and news-stands of America.

HYDE PARK ON SUNDAY.

Sunday is a sombre day in London. Everything is closed up but the churches and public houses. People go to church as if going to a funeral, and soberly and solemnly return. Innovations upon this Calvinistic Sabbath have been slow and few. For a few seasons past dinner parties have been given on Sundays, but only by the most adventurous and socially daring. It is known the Prince of Wales has been leading the way in this innovation, as if to feel the pulse of his people.

Last Sunday was a perfect day in London. It was warm and bright through all its hours. Hyde Park was in its glory. The temptation was irresistible. Perhaps not for a hundred years in London was Hyde Park so full on a Sunday. The carriages lingered. Those on foot stopped and loitered in conversation. The church-goers took the park in their way; and it is prophesied that this season will do more to break down this Sabbath superstition than the last score of years. Fashion is omnipotent in England.

PRIMROSE DAY AND BEACONSFIELD.

From Hyde Park let us go to Parliament Square. This square faces the Parliament Houses and Westminster Abbey, and here already are monuments to several of England's great statesmen. The day, unhappily, is dark and drizzling. This 19th of April is the second anniversary of the great Earl's death. There is a legend that Beaconsfield's favorit flower was the primrose. So primroses were strewn upon his grave when he was buried. On the first anniversary of his death the fashion was started for his fellow-partisans to wear or carry a nosegay of these simple, graceful wild flowers. This year, especially in view of the unveiling of the statue of the noble Earl, the whole country was scoured and every primrose to be found was sent to the great market-centre. Literally there were wagon-loads, indeed car-loads, of primroses sold in London, and not only the partisans of Beaconsfield but others who wished to do reverence to his memory wore a nosegay. The sweet little primrose was seen everywhere. The cab and omnibus drivers, the newsboys and bootblacks shared this honor with the peer of the realm today.

The bronze statue of Lord Beaconsfield is one of the noblest works of art in London. It is incomparably the most perfect piece of bronze work Signor Raggi has done. It was an act of courtesy that was happily conceived and a charming amenity of political life that Lord Arthur Russell took conspicuous part in this ceremony, for Beaconsfield was one of the very greatest of his uncle's political adversaries.

The speeches of Sir Stafford Northcote, Lord John Manners, and the Marquis of Salisbury were hearty and unusually sentimental. Rarely, if ever, does one hear from English statesmen sentences more exuberant. Sir Stafford spoke with genuine emotion of how Beaconsfield had "rooted himself in the affections" and "obtained a command over the hearts of the whole British people."

But Lord John Manners waxed eloquent. He told us with a singular fervor—indeed, an unction—that Lord Beaconsfield was "a charming, an ever-charming companion, and a true friend"; and further on in the speech, which was glowing from first to last, that "he had a heart full of the most generous emotions and alive to the tenderest and gentlest sympathies, a fancy ever free, an imagination ever soaring, a faith that was constant even unto death."

Beaconsfield was outwardly impassive. This was political policy. This was assumed, but not affected. He put on this air in honesty, not in hypocrisy. It was with him not posing, but he used it as a weapon. Often in the House when a political adversary has taunted him and reviled him he has never changed position or expression of countenance; has carelessly looked at the clock or wiped the dust from his boots. But those who knew him intimately all testify to the tenderness and depth of his feelings. It is perfectly true that Beaconsfield caught the imagination of the English people, and no public man of this generation has by his personality alone woven so instant a legend about his name. There is something not only powerful but weird at least about the legend, if not the personality of Beaconsfield.

ROBERT LAIRD COLLIER.

ELECTRIC CRANKS.

The Fancied Inventors Who Haunt the Offices of a Telegraph Company.

"We are overrun with inventors and deluged with plans for cables and underground systems. About every other man who calls to see us has a box under his arm containing a model of his scheme. We are glad, indeed anxious, to listen to them. While we do not expect anything perfect, or nearly so, we live in the hope that they may bring around an original idea which we can elaborate. We are willing to spend money in experimenting, and to afford them the use of our wires—in short, put our facilities for investigation at their command. This is generally known, and apparently acts as a powerful stimulus to the imagination of a host of—of—"

"What?" he was asked.

"I was about to say cranks. Very few of these 'inventors' are connected with telegraphy or any other form of applied electricity. It is singular also that a large percentage of them belong to one profession—the practice of a certain department of pathology—which has not the remotest relationship to electricity. They do not appear to realize that electricity is really a most abstruse science, and they rush in where its great professors fear to tread."

PERSONAL PECULIARITIES.

Asked to describe some of the inventive cranks and their ideas, the gentleman continued: "O, they are innumerable. The other day a jovial old farmer-looking chap came into my office to see, he said, the managing electrician. I referred him to the Superintendent, but he wanted a 'practical man.' Then he informed me that he had discovered a system of underground cables which was perfect. I asked him how he had found it, and he replied that it had been revealed to him in a dream. In his vision he had completed a machine by which he could cover with an absolutely perfect insulating material 400 miles of wire a day! He had not yet received his patent, and knew nothing of telegraphy, but would sell his invention for $1,000,000, and would explain it after we had paid over the money. Another man in Indianapolis wrote that he had discovered a cable so indestructible that the earth might be consumed and his cable would remain intact. He also wanted us to purchase his secret first.

"A man came to us," the gentleman went on, "with the plan of a new battery, one cell of which should equal three of Caland's—the heaviest battery known. It was a very new idea—that is, when his grandfather was born—the old salt-battery. The inventor claimed that its strength would never decrease. We made the experiment at considerable expense, thinking he might have something new. We found his claim as to the continuousness of his battery correct. It was so continuously weak we couldn't measure its power on the finest galvanometer. These fellows generally hit on old ideas. One of them—an Illinois schoolteacher—built a set of instruments that cost him his savings for a year and a half, only to find that he had taken up an induction idea long ago abandoned. Another man has a scheme for working a common iron wire under water, which he can't explain, but which he says is all right. Another came to me with a multiplex instrument, and also to learn how to wind the bobbin in it—the first thing an instrument-maker learns.

"The plans I listen to daily for electric lights, telephones, instruments, and cables are too many to enumerate. As a rule they are impracticable from the beginning. It is useless to tell these people to learn the first principles of the great force they aim to subvert. The knowledge that telegraph companies keep up a keen hunt for improvements and liberally encourage investigators urges them on. The prize to success is great. The man who invents a perfect cable or a new multiplex system will gain the key to a fortune like those of the modern Monte Cristos.

"However, instances are on record of amateurs stumbling upon great ideas. The germ of the duplex system, which is of incalculable value, was born in the mind of an operator who made no pretensions to proficiency in the science of applied electricity. The existence of aerial currents of electricity which may be used without wires was claimed as a discovery by two different men, each an amateur. The electric light was first made practicable by a man who was not a professional, and the inventor of the telephone was a college professor."

THE METROPOLIS.

A Change in Business Methods That Will Benefit the Consumer.

The Era of Stock and Grain Speculation Rapidly Drawing to a Close.

NEW YORK, May 3.—[Special Correspondence.]—It would take a great deal of research to find out how many times the story of Mary Rogers has been written. Poe made it a study, and uncounted writers have followed him in dealing with the mystery without clearing it up. To put it in a sentence, Mary was a salesgirl in John Anderson's cigar-store half a century before that tobacconist died a millionaire and philanthropist; at which time he did a small retail trade, and the beauty of his clerk while helping the business for awhile led to her murder by some undetected lover. After that tragedy girls ceased to be employed behind the counters of respectable tobacco stores, and it is only within the present week that the long disused device has been revived. Thus far there is but one instance, but it is notable. Confectioners have been putting white-aproned male candy-makers in their show-windows, to draw attention, griddle-cakes are made with neatness and dispatch in view of the passing throngs, athletes are employed to work exercising apparatus, folding beds are opened and shut, and now a large tobacco concern in Upper Broadway keeps a handsome girl rolling cigarets just behind the plate-glass window. Such work is usually done by machinery, and under ordinary conditions no profit could be made from employing hands; but there is no doubt that this girl is a profitable business venture, no matter what wages she demands for the public exhibition of her beauty. She is becomingly dressed, her manner is modest, she manipulates the weed and paper with graceful rapidity, and she manages to appear demurely unconscious of the crowd that constantly gazes at her. Hundreds of susceptible young fellows buy their cigarets here on her account, and are additionally delighted by the smoke which they think has been formulated by her fingers. Of course, she doesn't roll one in a thousand of the cigarets which her employer sells, but the mildly sentimental buyers are not arithmeticians.

The question of the propriety of increasing trade by such means is one that I raised with the proprietor.

"Where is the harm?" said he. "I pay this girl double the ordinary wages and clothe her besides. I took her out of a tenement-house where she and six other members of her family were rolling cigars in a small, stifling, unpleasant room. Here she has clean and pleasant surroundings, easy work, good pay, and in the constant enjoyment of having her pretty face admired. What is there derogatory to her in that? Don't actresses make beauty, when they've got it, their stock in trade? Don't our swellest belles, when they happen to be handsome, exhibit themselves in amateur theatricals and charity fairs?"

SOCIETY BELLES ON EXHIBITION.

He was right about the eagerness of our society beauties for public admiration. Several have allowed themselves to be placed in attitudes almost corresponding to those of the professional beauties in London aristocratic circles. However, charity is made to cover whatever sin there may be in this unveiling of wealth and fashion's best countenances. Mrs. James Brown Potter, a typical blonde and the pride of one of New York's most respected rich families, has become a star in amateur theatricals. She has just completed a week of matinée performances at the Madison Square Theatre. Tickets were sold in the regular way, the entertainments were given with all the pretentiousness and care of professional efforts, the looks and acting of Mrs. Potter were criticised at length in the newspapers, and, in all but the devotion of the proceeds to a charitable object, she stepped as far out of private life as though she had made her début as a matter of business. But the greatest show of society girls of late was expected at the Kirmess, or Dutch fair, given at Delmonico's establishment. The expectation was only in part realized, not because the advertised attractions failed to be there, but through the inadequacy of the house to hold a tithe of the people who tried to pay $1 apiece and get in.

The familiar schemes for getting money at fairs, such as the grab-bag, the gypsy fortune-teller, the lemonade well, and the flower stand were operated, and in addition there was a refreshment counter stocked with Dutch viands. But it was the ballet feature of the entertainment which excited most interest. There was a Dutch fisherman's reel and Tyrolean quadrille, each costumed and danced in correct character by eight couples warranted Knickerbocker. It was reckoned up that these thirty-two performers were heirs and heiresses to an equal number of millions. It is true that several were known to be all but penniless. But a single Astor was sufficient to bring up the average. It could not be conscientiously said that in good looks they were at all superior to a company that might have been taken by chance from the masses. Several of the girls were pretty, several were ugly, and a majority were commonplace, though all had an air of good enough breeding. The two dances were essentially a Virginia reel and a lanciers, embellished by fanciful variations of the old figures, and set to new music. Ladies may like to read something in particular about the costumes, and I will take for two illustrations the Misses Van Auken, than whom no girls are more conspicuous in that part of our population which regards itself as an aristocracy. Miss Jennie, as one of the fisher-maidens, wore a merino skirt of dark blue, trimmed with thin bands of black velvet, a white chemiset, and a red bodice, trimmed with silver spangles. The sleeves of filmy muslin were tightly banded at the elbows and wrists, the corsage was set off with Dutch tulips, and she made coquettish use of a white muslin apron by lifting its corners when tripping and posing in the dance. This enabled her to be graceful with her hands, for Knickerbocker birth doesn't endow one by nature with a knowledge of what to do with those members when a crowd is looking on. As for her feet, they were nimble and intricate in sandal slippers, while her ankles were sharply outlined by black stockings. Her cap was genuine Dutch—an heirloom in the Van Auken family. Her sister Cornelia, as a Tyrolean peasant, wore a red woolen skirt, with a deep band of old gold plush, and a fancy-painted bodice of red velvet. Like the other, the quality of her fabrics was not consonant with the character assumed, though the cut and colors were right, and the high Tyrolese straw hat gave an appearance of realism.

A queer sight was that of a daughter of the Astors in the guise of a street vender, squeezing here and there through the crowd, and persistently soliciting quarters for grabs of candy out of the bag which she carried. Vanderbilts were very numerous, about all of the sons and daughters of William H., with their wives, husbands, and children, being present. They have gone into society with much vim, and seemed to have conquered the prejudice which was held against them on account of their newness to wealth and fashion. That other sudden Crœsus, Jay Gould, shows no ambition in this direction. That he could buy his family's way into any social circle here is undoubted, for what Vanderbilt's money has done his can do. Besides, the Goulds are educated, and possess all the refinement requisit for the purpose.

MORALITY AND NIGHT TRAINS.

Jay Gould is credited, by the way, with having said—when somebody interviewed him as to the discontinuing of the night trains some months ago on one of the west side divisions of the Elevated Railroad—that it would be better for the morality of the metropolis with the after-midnight trains taken off. West-siders who live uptown generally disagreed with him, and now that the trains have been put on again the period during which they were discontinued does not shine out with any noticeable lustre as a season of exceptional morality. I have occasion frequently to go uptown after working a part of the night, and have seldom seen passengers in a condition which indicated that they had plunged deeper than usual into dissipation because of the knowledge that they could get home in short order under cover of the darkness by utilizing the facilities of rapid transit.

Occasionally, however, the merriment of late returners from a dinner party, breaking out in stories suggested by the talk between the sauterne and cognac, enlivens the half-hour's run from the post-office to the park. One night ex-Senator Ecclesine and a jolly party entered the train at Fourteenth street. Ecclesine is a rather striking looking man, with his fresh rosy face, black curving mustache and snow-white hair. The cut of his clothing proclaims him a New York politician. The talk of the party was on political matters, and the laughter was loud. Incidentally some one mentioned Ecclesine's white hair.

"Yes," said Ecclesine, "when I was with Tammany Hall they called me 'the silver-haired orator,' but now that I've left them they call me 'that gray-headed old son of a gun.'"

BUSINESS CHANGES.

"The wholesale trade of New York is being revolutionized," said a heavy jobber to me; "middlemen are going out. There is no room left for them any longer. Business can be done just as well without them. Let me illustrate. I am the agent for a big woolen-mill. We have all along been selling our product through commission merchants, who in turn sold to wholesale manufacturers of clothing, and they to retailers. So, you see, our cloth had to pass through the hands of two men, yielding a profit to each, before it got from the mill to the counter. We have just adopted a system that will exclude those two individuals. We shall now make our woolens right up into suits in a factory connected with the mill, and sell the complete garments directly to the retail dealer. Thus, besides saving the middlemen's profits, we avoid the considerable expense of rolling, wrapping, and attractively labeling our goods, as is necessary in sending it to market in the piece. By dividing the gain of this method with the retail dealer in the ready-made clothing we shall readily dispose of all that our mill can turn out. Manufacturers in various lines are coming to the same view, and all sorts of wares are going straight from the producer to the retailers."

This talk was in my friend's private office. A workman was removing a Wall-street "ticker" from its little shelf in a corner.

"Something new and improved in the way of stock speculation?" I asked.

"Yes, an improvement," was the serio-comic reply. "I am cutting off my telegraphic communication with Wall street, and that will be both new and improving. I am a reformed speculator—one of a dozen on this very block. The mania for getting rich by stock operations has spent itself, so far as New York merchants are concerned. That is the cause of the dullness that brokers down there complain of. A year ago I hardly knew a man in my rather extensive circle of mercantile acquaintance who wasn't in some sort of a scheme outside of his legitimate business. Everybody had a 'ticker' in his office, or a chunk of ore in his pocket, or his head full of some Coney Island or city amusement enterprise. Well, the brokers have absorbed all that he risked in margins, his mines have proved worthless, and his seaside hotels and city music-gardens are bankrupt. And his regular business has, perhaps, been seriously imperiled by the withdrawal of capital and attention. But that is about over. Some new folly may set in, but for the present we are reforming."

AN OLD ROMANCE.

In removing the "ticker" the man disclosed a curious object that had hung in partial obscurity on the wall. It was a sort of plaque, made of baked pottery in the high art style now so widely affected. It presented a surface which, on looking closer, I recognized as the bark of a tree, and into it were cut two initials and a heart in a rude monogram. The design explained itself. That man's life must indeed be barren of sentimental passages which does not, back somewhere in his youth, contain the carving of his own and a sweetheart's mutual adoration into the bark of a secluded tree. My strictly business companion was a little, but not much, ashamed to recall this in his own case.

"O, that's a trifle," he said. "You see, my wife came across the spot where I had used a jack-knife on an old maple down in Connecticut when we were boy and girl together. It struck her, don't you see, that it would be a novel idea to take an impression of it and have it molded for a plaque. She has rather a taste that way. Not so bad, either, is it? We've got one up at the house, and this is a duplicate. The heart is pretty nearly filled up with new bark grown in, 'twas shaped so long ago, and yet it's all there—ain't it?—and the initials with it. An odd thing to hang up in a mercantile office, eh?"

"So you are going to take it down?"

"Well, no. The 'ticker' must go, but I guess that little souvenir won't interfere with business."

THE CONCORD SCHOOL.

Program for the Summer Term of 1883—List of the Lecturers and Titles of Their Lectures.

BOSTON, Mass., May 2.—[Special Correspondence.]—A circular, such as is usually issued by the Concord Summer School of Philosophy about May 1 of each year, has been prepared. Two important changes in the lecturers will be noticed. Mr. Alcott may possibly be present at the lectures, provided he survives so long, but he will not be able to engage in the conversations as before, nor even to preside at the meetings, as it appears now. I have been told today by the Secretary of the school that in addition to other complications Mr. Alcott is threatened with angina pectoris. Dr. H. K. Jones, of Jacksonville, Ill., will also drop out from the list of lecturers. An important change has also been made in the length of the individual courses of lectures. No one lecturer will give more than four lectures, instead of eight and ten, as in previous years. Wednesday, July 18, will be the opening day. The term will be four weeks long, Aug. 12 being the last day. Ten lectures will be given each week, one each upon the morning and evening of every week-day except Saturday. Hillside Chapel, adjoining the former Alcott house, and a stone's throw from the old Hawthorne residence, will be the lecture-room, as it has been for the last four years.

Below is the program for the four weeks, which is liable to change: Dr. W. T. Harris will give four lectures on "Man's Immortality in the Light of Philosophy and Religion." This subject in detail will be: 1. The Absolute a personal reason. Discussion of Plato's insight (tenth book of Ten Laws) and Aristotle's (the eighth book of his Physics and the eleventh book of his Metaphysics). 2. Triune nature of God—St. Augustine, St. Thomas Aquinas, St. Anselm.—Justice and grace in the divine nature. 3. The world as a revelation of the Divine First Cause—Nature and man; the doctrine of evolution; the orders of being as progressive revelation of the divine. 4. Immortality of the individual man in the light of psychology—in the light of the Christian religion; the vocation of man in the future life. Prof. George H. Howison, of Boston, will give four lectures on "Hume and Kant, and the Merits of the Issue Between Them." His several subjects will be these: 1. "Hume's Aim and Method; the Problem as Handed Over to Kant." 2. "Kant's Mode of Dealing with This Problem." 3. "The Strength and Weakness of Kant's Methods and Results." 4. "Attempts by Subsequent Thinkers to Supply Kant's Defects; the Desiderata Still Remaining." The Rev. Robert A. Holland, of Chicago, who was elected at the close of the last summer term to be a member of the permanent faculty of the school, will deliver four lectures on Hegel's philosophy of religion. Mr. Denton J. Snider, of St. Louis, will give four lectures in a course, whose general title is "Homer and the Greek Religion," and whose individual titles are these: Literary Bibles—Homer: the Iliad; the Odyssey; the Gods. The Rev. Dr. John S. Kedrey, of the Episcopal Divinity School at Faribault, Minn., will lecture twice upon "Art Appreciation and the Higher Criticism." Mr. F. B. Sanborn, Secretary of the school, will deliver four lectures on the history of philosophy in America, whose subjects will be these: 1. The Puritan Philosophy—Jonathan Edwards; 2. The Philanthropic Philosophy—Benjamin Franklin; 3. The Negation of Philosophy; 4. The Ideal and Vital Philosophy—R. W. Emerson. The venerable Rev. C. A. Bartel, pastor for nearly forty-five years of the West Church in Boston, will give one lecture on "Optimism and Pessimism—A Personal Equation. Miss Elizabeth P. Peabody, well known as an active friend of kindergartens, will give one lecture on Milton's "Paradise Lost." Dr. John Albee, of Newcastle, N. H., will lecture twice upon "Norman Influence on the English Language and Literature." "A Study of Nirvana" will be contributed by Mrs. Ednah D. Cheney. President Porter, of Yale, is set down for a lecture on "Kant's Categorical Imperative." Mrs. Julia Ward Howe will give a conversation upon a subject not yet announced. Julian Hawthorne will lecture upon "Novels." Dr. David A. Wasson will give one lecture upon "Herbert Spencer's Causal Law of Evolution." Mr. Lewis J. Block, not well known yet at the East, now teaching philosophy in Chicago, and author of two volumes of poetry, will give one lecture on "Platonism and Its Relation to Modern Thought." He was formerly a resident of Jacksonville, the home of Dr. Jones and the Plato Club. Arrangements for attendants upon the lectures are substantially the same as last year.

ART AND ARTISTS.

The collection of paintings and other works of art owned by Mr. E. Buckingham, 2036 Prairie avenue, is particularly rich in water-colors, prominent among them being a superb effort of poetical imagination by the late Gustave Doré, and which, being dated 1881, may be accepted as one of his last contributions to this department of art. Apart from the interest attaching to the work from the death of its great and versatile author, the painting is amply deserving of study for its own sake. It is entitled "Fairyland," and in it the artist has allowed his daring and prolific genius to run riot in a very prodigality of fantastic grace and beauty. It has often been said that Gustave Doré could not produce a satisfactory type of female loveliness. The charge is not an unusual one, nor is it confined to painters. In sculpture at least one great master has had the same fault laid at his door, and in literature no less a writer than Thackeray has been blamed for his inability to depict a really satisfactory woman. And there is doubtless some truth in the charge, but, like most sweeping charges of the kind, it is only half true. Thackeray has given us at least two beautiful types of womanhood, and in this picture of "Fairyland" Doré has given us as many. To describe the painting so as to bring it vividly before the reader's eye is next to impossible, owing to the Oriental luxuriance of its imagery and the bewildering variety of its figures.

As to the landscape portion of it, that consists of a placid lake with gigantic trees, gnarled and weird after Doré's magnificently fantastic manner, which overhang it from either shore. On one of the thickly-foliaged branches to the left that stretches loving arms out over the inviting water the Faerie Queen, beautiful with a beauty transcending that of mortal, reclines easily on her back, her head thrown carelessly back and her superbly-rounded arms thrown luxuriously upward in just such an attitude as we should expect from one of Mr. Tennyson's lotus-eaters. To her right swings a rival faerie—rival, at any rate, by the Divine gift of beauty—and all around earth, lake, and sky literally swarm with more or less indistinct figures of diminutive faeries, gnomes, and nymphs. Away in the purple distance, across what seem interminable leagues of ethereal loveliness, rise the walls of a great castle, white and imposing against the red glow of the evening sky, and overhead, "dim seen against the blue mane," a long line of little faeries is seen, crow-like, fluttering up the azure vault. For variety of form and attitude, imaginative richness, and softness of coloring the picture is as fine an example of its author's powers as the writer has yet seen, and over all these hangs that mystic glamour—that light that never was on sea or land—of which Wordsworth so finely sings.

Of a quite different and much more sober kind is the next work which meets the eye, one by Elizabeth Gardner, a favorit pupil of Bougareau. It is Evangeline; the Evangeline of Longfellow; of the world; of all time. She might indeed have stepped out of the very page of that gentle master of song, the sainted laureate of the human heart, so perfectly has the artist realized in expression, color, and form the gentle, loving, pure, and radiant original. In a very charming poem, with which readers of these later times are probably not familiar, but which far transcends in quiet beauty and truth the erotic productions of contemporary poets whom the world delights to honor, there is a picture of a gentle Scottish maiden, who was surely the twin sister of Longfellow's lovely heroine. The poem is by one Hogg, popularly known as the "Ettrick Shepherd," and the lines referred to are descriptive of the return of the heroine from a seven years' sojourn in Fairyland. The passage referred to begins something like this:

> Kilmeny cam' hame,
> And the soft desire o' maiden's een
> In that maiden's eye was never seen.

These are not the exact words—remembered quotations almost never are correct—but they may remind some readers of the passage suggested. And somehow, why, it is impossible to say, Hogg's lovely idealization is inseparably linked in the writer's mind with the not less lovely and far more human conception of our own National poet. And to the combined modesty, loveliness, gentleness, womanliness, purity, and unmeasurable capacity for loving and love, with which these two heroines were dowered, Miss Gardner has given noble and almost perfect realization. Evangeline is depicted as she was, as

> Wearing her Norman cap, and her kirtle of blue, and the earrings
> Brought in the olden time from France, and since, as an heirloom, > Handed down from mother to child, through long generations.
> But a celestial brightness—a more ethereal beauty—
> Homeward serenely she walked with God's benediction upon her.
> When she had passed it seemed like the ceasing of exquisit music.

And that is exactly how Miss Gardner has painted her—sweet-faced, red-lipped, tender-eyed, with just the suspicion of a smile on those ripe, full lips, that one would have almost died to kiss. Her right hand holds her missal close to her breast, and her left, very finely drawn, crosses the waist, and under the other grasps a string of white beads. On her back hangs a cloak of light drab, fastened round the breast by a fine cord. Everything is in perfect keeping, the subdued beauty of the surroundings and the quiet harmony of the color being all seemingly symbolical of her own modest and retiring character.

Close by is another exquisit effort of imaginative art representing Aurora, the goddess of the morning, standing on tiptoe and blowing trumpet-like a morning-glory, which her shapely right hand holds daintily to her lips. And how charming she looks with her beautiful face thrown back and her left hand gracefully and modestly upholding, as if to hide her gently-swelling breast, a loose robe, which leaves her arms, and bust, and feet bare, in all their natural and unaided loveliness. Being the goddess of the dawn, it goes without saying that she has light yellow hair, which streams down about her in just such a flood of golden glory as that in which the amorous Jove wooed and won the Danae of whom Horace sings.

Near by is a very pleasing picture by Elizabeth Murray, an English artist lately deceased, and who passed many years of her life in Florence and Spain. With the latter country, so rich in story and romance, she was particularly fascinated, and many of her best creations might be used to illustrate the tales of the Alhambra. In this painting we have a charming little Morocco maiden, her sweet round face, so radiantly pure and modest in expression, lit up by a pair of great lustrous blue eyes. Round her neck is a string of pearls, which seem to cling so lovingly as to remind one of Lovelace's fine lines apropos of a lady's girdle:

> Give me but what this zone surrounds,
> And let the other world go by.

The quotation is not accurate, but the words express the sentiment well enough to illustrate the text. The little girl's hands are easily crossed low in front, her rich, dark-brown hair rippling down either side the head, sets off the sweet, wee face becomingly, and the daintily embroidered jacket of pink and sash of blue add just that brightness of color which is requisit to give the painting animation and life.

From the same artist is a remarkably fine interior, representing "The Hall of the Ambassadors" in the Alhambra. Nothing can exceed the elaborate fidelity of architectural detail, the infinitly minute and graceful rendering of the fretwork, and the general tone of the whole work. In front, near a still fountain, are two heavily cloaked and cowled natives, one lazily smoking and the other deep in some legend of old Spanish days, seated, tailor-fashion, on a piece of carpet. On the doorsteps to the left are other figures, and through the open window at the extreme back of the magnificent building one catches a refreshing glimpse of blue sky, sunshine, and greenery.

M. V. Chevilliard has a marvelously-well painted and humorously conceived picture called "The Lion and the Fly"; the lion being represented by a fat, scarlet-coated, and gray-mustached church beadle, who is stretched full length, face upwards, on an altar, while the fly, in the person of a nice little chorister in crimson stole with lace front, is trying to tickle him into life. The figures are admirably drawn; the expression of the youngster's face is full of humor, and the coloring is wonderfully rich and mellow. By the beadle's side repose his admiral-shaped hat, sword, and insignia of office, while the wall is adorned with pictures of saints, relieved by the worthy officer's lantern, hung on a nail, his bugle and other official implements. The drapery is exquisitly rendered, and the whole picture of that kind that provokes repeated study.

Indoni is represented by an animated and richly-painted transcript of continental life, deserving of study for the correctness of the drawing and the breadth of the effects. It is an outdoor scene, presumably in Italy, in which two donkey-driving peasants are represented as standing by a well, indulging in pleasant badinage with two very charming and coquetish girls, who are evidently well able to hold their own. To the right a peasant lad is seen descending and outdoor stair, and at a table, on which stand a modest tumbler of vin ordinaire and a piece of bread, is seated a drab-cloaked priest, his head half turned round in evident eagerness not to lose a word of the conversation. The attitude and expression of the priest are very suggestive, and remind one of Mrs. Browning's fine lines on Chaucer, at least the concluding one:

> "Dan Chaucer, with that infantine
> Familiar grasp of things divine,
> That stain upon thy lip is wine."

And the stain on the worthy priest's lip is evidently wine. The work is full of humor, the colors, although varied and bright, are finely harmonized, the grouping is perfect, and the whole piece is instinct with movement and life.

And now we come to an interior which simply transcends criticism; in this particular line it is hard to imagine that art can any further go. It is St. Mark's, Venice, and by Ruskin's illustrator and friend, John Bunney. Down to the minutest detail everything is perfect, and, looking at the delicately-veined marble steps, one feels almost irresistibly impelled to lay his hand on them to make sure they are not actual stone.

Another capital painting, though in an entirely different vein, is one by Nayone, in which four peripatetic Italian musicians are shown, playing away for dear life. The attitudes are perfect; each face tells its own story; and one is quite sure that the gentle-faced old fellow with spectacles on nose and battered white hat on head, who belabors the bass fiddle, has a history, and a romantic one at that. One thing is certain, he was not always a street fiddler, and a whole world of tragedy looks out from his gentle, unsuspicious eyes. Then there is a woman with a mandolin, or some such musical instrument, and her face, too, is its own historian. The greatest of all woman poets has told us of "Those faces one sees in the street." And this is one of them; only not the worst. Worn, and haggard, and faded as her beauty is, this, we are quite sure, is no Magdalene. Poor she is, wretchedly dressed, haggard and wan, but through it all—through wearied looks and scanty, well-worn clothes—shines the pure and tender-hearted woman. Can it be that the old man is her father, whom she supports, and the young man by her side who holds the violin so jauntily and strikes so romantic an attitude is her lover? And if so, what rôle in the little drama is filled by the poor, wo-begone flageolet player, out of whose white and unexpressionless face long years of misfortune and hardship have wiped every trace of human interest.

If all the readers of THE TRIBUNE were children one would hardly require to introduce R. Caldecott, but as they are not this much may be said: that he is one of the best illustrators of nursery tales and children's stories who ever lived. And this series of eight small pictures gives Mr. Caldecott at his best. Perhaps you have never heard the lines, but they run something like this:

> Four and twenty blackbirds baking in a pie;
> When the pie was opened, the birds began to sing,
> "O isn't this a dainty dish to set before a King?"

Then there is something about the culinary propensities of her royal Majesty and the financial proclivities of her royal spouse, but these, being subordinate to the great fact of the simultaneous singing of four-and-twenty baked blackbirds, hardly call for detailed mention. And here we have the whole story—a comedy in eight acts, and every other act better than the one before it. First comes an old lady—such a nice old lady, too—who is seated in a great arm-chair telling the story of the resurrected blackbirds to a group of deeply-interested little ones. So much by way of prologue, and now the real work begins, at least for the blackbirds, and a little boy and a wee mite of a girl are represented trapping the birds in a field covered with snow. The birds captured and cooked, the delighted household is shown to us, every one in raptures over the birds. Then come the King and Queen, and then, more interesting than either, although only a serving-girl, the charming little maiden who "hung out the clothes." But why enumerate the various incidents in the sensational story? Hard-hearted critics blame Miss Braddon and Mr. Wilkie Collins for having introduced sensational fiction, but here is the old story of the four and twenty blackbirds, written so far back that nobody can tell when, and the best-informed incline to the belief that these blackbirds were the identical ones Noah took into the ark. And if it is not sensational one would like to know what is. The hapless maiden lost her nose, and neither the author of "Lady Audley's Secret," nor he of "The Woman in White," ever dared to deprive their heroine of her nose. This, however, is by the way, and it only remains to say that Mr. Caldecott's sketches are simply perfect.

Besides the paintings, there are in the collection a large number of valuable bronzes, pieces of old Vienna china, engravings, and etchings, with flower pieces, most delicately painted, by Pauline Gerarde, and many beautiful pictures on porcelain.

APPARATUS FOR DISINFECTING CLOTHES.

[London Times.]—In several hospitals in Berlin, Stettin, and other parts of Germany the disinfecting apparatus of Schimmel & Co., of Chemnitz, patented about a year ago, is now used. The agent is heat (both moist and dry). The general arrangement is as follows: There is a large case with double walls of sheet metal and a bad heat conductor between. This communicates with a chimney at the top behind, and in front has two doors: the upper doorway admits a frame-bearing wagon on rails, and the lower another wagon, also on rails, with the heating system. The former wagon has a permeable bottom and cross-bars in the frame, from which are hung in linen bags the clothes to be disinfected. The lower wagon carries a thick tube which returns (horizontally) on itself, and bears a series of projecting ribs. Above and parallel with it is another tube of copper, with numerous small holes to let steam out. When the laden clothes-wagon has been pushed into the upper part and the door shut behind it, the steam-valve of the connection with the rib tube system is opened, as also an air-valve below, and the chimney-valve, and the heating proceeds till a thermometer, readable outside, marks 110 degrees C. Then the steam and chimney-valves are two-thirds closed, and the other steam-valve, that of the perforated tube, opened. The steam is thus allowed to act directly about twenty to thirty minutes. After this tube is closed further heating by the other system is continued about a quarter of an hour, the ventilating valves being fully open. The process of disinfection lasts one and a quarter to one and a half hour. The upper wagon may then be taken out and laden afresh.

A DAUGHTER OF THE SEA.

For The Chicago Tribune.

I saw her standing near the beach,
Beside the restless sea;
And ne'er a drop 'mid all those waves
Was half as pure as she,
And lilies white as Ocean's foam,
Were ne'er as fair to see.

Her hair was like the yellow sands
That lie at Ocean's door;
Her eyes were like the waters blue
That melted on the shore;
Her lips were red as coral-spray
That lines the deep sea-floor.

She saw the ships of Life go out
That one day would come in;
And was there in her heart of hearts
A prayer that one would win?
Or did she stand beside the shore
And idle fancies spin?

I cannot tell you what she thought,
Because she never said
If Fancy whispered sweet and low,
Or whether Love was dead;
For she was nothing more than just—
A schooner's figure-head!

ERNEST McGAFFEY.

THE FASHIONS.

Latest New York and Paris Modes for the Ladies.

[New York Post.]—Ribbons grow more and more gorgeous; and no color seems too brilliant to be used by itself, or in combination with several others, as a trimming for bonnet or dress.

Tailor-made costumes in tweed, pepper-and-salt mixtures, cheviots, in heather mixtures, mottled cloths, and undefined stripes and plaids, are selling in large quantities for fatigue costumes.

Very pretty bonnets for spring wear are in the Kate-Greenaway shape—the brim formed of flat ruffles of cream lace, and the crown of dark velvet, which is sometimes replaced by interlacing ottoman ribbons an inch and a half in width, one strand being of cream and the other of a contrasting color.

Ribbon-trimmings were never worn in greater profusion or showed greater variety of material, coloring, and design. The most expensive of these are hand-painted, broad silk or satin sashes, with groups of flowers, Cupids' heads, mosses, ferns, and swinging garlands of strawberries and vines, painted on the ends. These sashes make an elegant finish to a child's or young lady's toilet.

The daintiest and most convenient of spring trifles are the new "manchons," or muffs, matching the costume, and trimmed with velvet, lace, flowers, or, prettiest of all, with small birds. A little concealed pocket in the muff affords a hiding-place for card-case, handkerchief, purse, or vinaigret. The latest fancy is to attach these manchons to a tiny gold or silver chatelaine, which is fastened by a clasp to the belt.

The most fashionable of the white toilets worn this summer, instead of being relieved by the usual colors of rose-color, blue, or mauve, will be enlivened by the newer shades of French terracotta, tea-rose, shrimp-pink, and the like; and a leading toilet will be one of white nuns' veiling or vigogne, with broad sash and other satin ribbon trimmings of pale primrose-yellow, with primroses in the corsage and hair, and necklace and chatelaine of amber beads.

It is whispered that the glory of the cropped heads of hair is departed; and the brown "nimbus" or flaxen halo of little rings of hair coiled into "Marguerites" or "Montagues" all over the head by the magic of bandoline is to be supplanted by the hair drawn up to the top of the head and coiled there like a wavy coronet, leaving the nape of the neck "en evidence" again. This will certainly be a change; but how the tresses which have so long been trained downward to form this "glory" are to be made long enough to reach the top of the head is a mystery to be solved only by the crafty hairdresser, who is generally equal to any emergency in his "profession." The girls who have clung to their tresses, affecting the little Grecian door-knockers throughout it all, certainly have their reward now; for, while the unfortunate owners of cropped locks are undergoing all the torments of a new growth, their sisters of long locks will be coroneted and crowned with an abundant wreath of hair which is to be accepted as "all their own."

A dress of Worth's designing has the train of the skirt disposed in tearose-colored brocade, with tiny shell pleatings of plain tearose satin around the foot of the dress. The petticoat is of moss-green velvet, bordered at the lower edge with a magnificent appliqué embroidery of beads and vitrification resembling jewels in emerald and pink tints—the emeralds forming leaves, and the pink beads composing roses and half-open buds. The bodice is in old cuirass-shape; and at the sides of the "casement" opening is set a Medici collar, narrow here, and widening to a depth of six inches as it encircles the back of the neck. This collar is completely covered with the beaded embroidery. The sleeves are mere straps of satin, also glistening with the bead-work, and finished with a fall of rose point-lace.

Among handsome spring-wraps temptingly displayed are long French redingotes of heavy lustrous, satin-finish gros-grain or ottoman silk. Some are made up perfectly plain, except the handsome brandebourgs or other ornaments across the chest. More costly models, however, are elegantly trimmed with elaborate beaded gimps and appliqué bands, some of which are a quarter of a yard wide. In many instances the redingotes are cut off in front to simulate a waistcoat—the sides forming wide panels, surrounded with the rich passementerie bands which are carried up from these panels to the bodice portion, thus forming a waistcoat. Medallions and pendants are sometimes set down the centre of the panels. Around the neck is a deep collar, thickly covered with a network of the beading; and deep cuffs of the same trimming finish the close coat sleeves.

The cloth dresses worn this spring are exceedingly neat, and when well made are very stylish. Some are perfectly plain, with only three or four rows of silk stitching to finish off collar, cuffs, and paniers—depending for their ornamentation upon their handsome buttons or buckles. Others again are braided, and in some cases so elaborately that it is difficult to know which is the material and which is the braiding. These suits are usually made with a box-pleated skirt, the box-pleats being nearly as wide as panels, to allow for the extensive braiding on each pleat. The paniers are short and neat; the prettier ones are those laid in deep upright folds and not braided. With these skirts is worn either a Newmarket jacket or, what is nattier still, an open jacket with rounded waistcoat beneath. This jacket is cut away over the hips, with pleated basques in the back. Where braiding is used this trimming is laid heavily down the fronts and over the sides of the waistcoat and upon collars and cuffs.

Some very magnificent materials have just been introduced for dinner and reception dresses, which are reproductions of superb antique Venetian stuffs, and said to be copied from dresses represented in pictures of Paul Veronese and Titian. One of these rare materials shows a pattern in gold of vine-leaves in their natural size on a ground of dark green velvet. Less showy, but more elegant, is another design of silver ivy-leaves over a pink satin ground. These fabrics are extremely high-priced, $40 a yard being asked; so it is well that in making up a toilet the train alone is made of the large patterned brocade, which would be most unbecoming to either a large or a small figure if used for the entire dress. The corsage and petticoat are made of plain satin the tint of the groundwork; sometimes, however, when the pattern is not too large, the brocade is used as a trimming to the portions made of plain satin.

Velvet is the favorit material for handsome demi-season costumes, these being totally untrimmed, save in the matter of buttons, the most expensive and fashionable of which are designs of buttons worn in George I.'s time and those worn at the Court of Louis XVI. Some of these are very chaste, and excellent imitations of the genuine articles grown dim and dusky with age; and the fashion is to pick up a half-dozen buttons worn by some dandy or beau in the gay world of a century ago. These velvet costumes are about the only ones that are made of a single material. Nearly all others are combinations, the favorit contrasts being satin and brocade, merveilleux and cashmere, or ottoman and cut velvet. A popular brocaded velvet used at present is a dark-colored broché design on a light ground. The plain satin, made up with the broché, sometimes matches the dark hue of the design, and sometimes the shade of the groundwork, depending upon the occasion the dress is worn, both being in equally good taste. On some of the new patterned brocades the designs are monstrously large, but the best-dressed people draw the line at medium size.

HE GOT THAR.

[Detroit Free Press.]—Going down the great Jackson route from Grenada, Miss., a regular old homespun native of the State entered the sleeping-car and paid for a berth. He had never been inside of a car of the kind, and everything astonished him. When the porter came to make up the beds I saw that the native was greatly perplexed, but as he made no direct appeal it wasn't my duty to post him. He was the first one to make preparations for bed. He glanced anxiously around, pulled off one boot, and then took a rest for five minutes. When the other boot came off he had solved the problem. Pushing his boots under the berth he started for the rear platform, and nothing was heard from him for about ten minutes. Then he put his head into the door and called out:

"All you 'uns in thar,' look out, for I'm coming!"

And come he did. He had disrobed while standing on the platform, made a bundle of coat, vest, and pants, and as he shot into bed after a run up the aisle he gurgled out:

"Old Mississip may be a little slow, but she allus gits thar, just the same!"

A MESSENGER.

For The Chicago Tribune.

The wind is blowing out of the West,
Where the swift ice-rivers flow;
It has played along the mountain-crest
With the cedars white in snow:
It brings a word from near the seas,
From bending fields of grain,
And whispers it to the maple-trees
And my rattling window-pane.

This is the message you would speak,
O wind with breath of snow:
You kissed my love on blushing cheek,
And come to tell me so;
You kissed her, when a truant breeze,
Till she, frightened, bade you stop;
And now you boast of it to the trees

Joseph Jefferson and Lester Wallack at McVicker's and Haverly's.

Several Concerts Announced for This Week—Notes and Gossip of the Stage.

THE DRAMA.

Review of the Week.

The only event at the theatres during the last week which calls for especial mention is the engagement of Mme. Janauschek at Haverly's, and it is to be regretted that her business has been so light, as she is undoubtedly a great artiste and the only living exponent of her peculiar line of acting. Her school is the heroic, and in her repertory are embraced a number of strong plays which no other actress would or could sustain. Her new play, which was presented to a Chicago audience for the first time Monday evening, under rather unfavorable circumstances, was repeated during the week with the full strength of the cast, and is unquestionably one of the best dramas in her repertory, as it affords opportunity for the exhibition of her strong heroic and emotional powers. In "Bleak House," which is a very bad piece of dramatic construction, she carried the play by her artistic rendition of the dual rôles of Lady Dedlock and Hortense—two characters utterly unlike in every particular. In her other plays, "Mother and Son," "Mary Stuart," and "Marie Antoinette," she has been seen and admired here before, and it is a sad commentary upon the dramatic taste of Chicago theatre-goers that they have not accorded more liberal support to one of the greatest actresses on the stage, especially at a time when such inferior attractions were offered at the other theatres.

At McVicker's the excellent Madison Square company has been playing "Esmeralda" to very small audiences, but it is a play which has no particular draft, and such business is to be looked for during the third week of its presentation in a single season—not even fine acting and elaborate stage effects could help it. The patrons of the Academy of Music have sympathized with the blind Louise in "The Two Orphans" during the week. At the Olympic Miss Katie Howard in "The Waifs of New York" and the "Original Big 4" have shared the attention of good-sized audiences. Business at the Lyceum and Criterion has been large.

Joseph Jefferson's Engagement at McVicker's.

There are always a number of events in the dramatic line which are looked forward to each season by Chicago theatre-goers, and among the most notable of these is the appearance of that sterling American comedian, Joseph Jefferson. Heretofore he has been seen only in "Rip Van Winkle" and as Bob Acres in "The Rivals," but tomorrow evening he begins an engagement at McVicker's Theatre, during which he will be seen in a number of the best old comedies. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings "The Rivals" will be presented, with Mr. Jefferson as Bob Acres. Friday and Saturday evenings and at the Saturday matinée he will appear as Caleb Plummer in "The Cricket on the Hearth," and as Mr. Golightly in "Lend Me Five Shillings." During the second week of the engagement he will be seen as Dr. Pangloss in "The Heir at Law" and as Dr. Ollapod in "The Poor Gentleman." It is probable that a few representations of the favorit "Rip" will be given. The company supporting Mr. Jefferson is an excellent one. The advance sale of seats has been large and the engagement will undoubtedly be a great success.

Amusements in New York—Palmer and Shook—Wyndham—Young's New Play.

NEW YORK, May 3.—[Special Correspondence.]—As I passed into the Union Square Theatre last evening early I met both Mr. A. M. Palmer and Mr. Sheridan Shook, his successor in the management, and spoke with them of the change.

"You must have seen that my health was damaged months ago," said Mr. Palmer, "when you used to meet the doctor in my office on Fourteenth street. I have not exposed my health recklesly in any way, but I was never robust, and the strain of too much anxiety and responsibility has done the injury, which is not very serious." He leaned languidly against the back of a seat as he spoke and looked like his old self, only a little tired. "I am going to rest. I shall go to Connecticut now, up to my old home where I have a place, and along in midsummer I shall go over to Europe and stay there a year, may be. I shall not be wholly idle, as I have some little dramatic schemes to mature. I leave my business with some regret, of course, but this is far less than it would be if I were not sure that the theatre would maintain the rank it has reached under my management."

"As far as I have the ability," said Mr. Shook, "it shall hold its own. I don't mean to change the purpose and general character of the theatre at all. Most of the stock company will be retained, but I shall try to strengthen it before opening for the regular season. The theatre will still be assigned to light comedy and society dramas as well set as they always have been. Our motto will be: 'The prime object of a place of amusement is to amuse.'"

"I have always left preaching to the churches," put in Mr. Palmer. "I care very little for the didactic drama, and should never put a sermon into the mouth of an actor. At the same time there is no necessary collision between the stage and the pulpit. Each has a legitimate mission, and the preachers and we ought to be friends."

I was glad to tell Mr. Palmer, what New-Yorkers generally feel, that he has given the city the best theatre, all in all, that it has ever had—the highest uniform excellence of acting, the finest scenery, the most superbly set—and that on such a record he could retire with honor. He disclaimed any wish to be contrasted with others' to their disadvantage, but said he had always had a high ideal towards which he had worked. He spoke with much interest and feeling of those who during these twelve years have coöperated to win his greatest successes—Clara Morris, Fanny Morant, Sara Jewett, Agnes Ethel, Kate Claxton, Mrs. Wilkins, Charles Thorne, John Parselle, John Stoddart, McKee Rankin, Ida Vernon, Maude Harrison, and others.

The theatre now returns to the hands of its builder and first owner. Mr. Shook has not only had large managerial experience, but his public service in various offices has added to this a knowledge of finance and a wide acquaintance which will strengthen him much for the vocation to which he has returned. Last evening the house was crowded throughout, and the sign which gladdens the manager's heart was hanging in the vestibule. Wyndham's company played in its most dashing style of wild abandon the play, new to our stage, "The Great Divorce Case," which might more appropriately be styled "His Mother-in-Law." The story is full of farcical elements adapted to the Wyndham touch-and-go jollity. Two staid lawyers who are badgered by their wives' mothers resolve to go off for a lark one night and "be wicked," just to see how it will seem. They follow two respectable, but imprudent, ladies home to their hotel, get into their rooms by a ruse, and there result the craziest jumble of misconceptions, cross-purposes, escapades, and delicious tomfoolery ever seen. Few plays are ever greeted with such a continuous fire of laughter. The make-ups were some of them inconceivably grotesque. Wyndham is going from here to California with his company.

The regular Union Square company goes to Boston for four weeks. In August it will open in San Francisco and play a return trip via Chicago.

NEW PLAY BY WILLIAM YOUNG.

"The Russian Honeymoon," Mrs. Burton Harrison's taking play, will be withdrawn at the Madison Square shortly, as it has answered the purpose of the management to introduce variety, and, unlike any other of the Madison Square plays, it will not be put on the road. It will be followed by a play written by Mr. William Young, of Chicago, who is now in Europe, and who, as is well known, is the author of "Pendragon" and "The House of Mauprat." The play has been christened "The Rajah," but as this sounds Oriental and sanguinary, it may be changed to "Winship's Ward." In this play Mr. Young has made a departure from his customary bent, and has produced a regular comedy. "The Rajah" is a soubriquet given to Winship, a man in his thirties, who has served in India, because of his luxurious, indolent, and extravagant habits. His character may be inferred when it is said that if the end of the world were announced he would calmly and lazily ring for brandy and soda. In spite of these characteristics he develops a sort of dignity and courage that seems incompatible with them, and does some manly things in the course of the play, and wins the sympathy of the audience. Most people respect laziness in a man who is not compelled to work. An old relative dies, and leaves under Winship's protection a pretty girl who becomes his ward. There is a coal-mine also imposed on him, and a strike of the miners, in which Winship manages things admirably in his own odd way, showing great decision and great humanity. At last, through his firmness and kindness, he quells the disturbance. The girl saves his life in the midst of the mêlée from the ring-leader of the mob. Winship falls in love with her. She laughs at him and snubs him, but he conquers, of course, at last. This comedy is by no means commonplace in its texture; the dialog is brisk and snapping, and Mr. Frohman anticipates a great success with it. If his anticipations are realized it will be sent out with a second company.

Closing Performances of the Festival at Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, O., May 5.—[Special.]—At the matinée today "Romeo and Juliet" was produced and witnessed by a crowded house, and tonight "Othello" is to be repeated, bringing the festival to a close. Of "Romeo and Juliet" it is impossible to speak well. Except McCullough, whose flexible genius seems to adapt itself readily to any and every part, and who played Mercutio to the life, the chief performers were unsatisfactory. Miss Mary Anderson's Juliet did only not seem very dead because Mr. Barrett's Romeo was so much worse. He cannot love, or, loving, lacks the power of sentimental expression, and as to Miss Anderson, she thinks so much of herself that the audience is apt to think very little, and in the balcony scene does not make love; she merely poses and flirts. The play, by the way, was magnificently set, and a cordial word of praise is due to the management generally for the promptness and precision with which all their engagements have been kept, and the magnificent success with which they have carried through a gigantic undertaking.

The not unwarranted suspicions at first entertained by many that the festival would turn out merely a great advertising show, have been completely dissipated, and the impartial historian, when he comes to write of Cincinnati, will be able truthfully to eulogize it as the greatest artistic success in matters dramatic which the country has ever witnessed. The weather today, though threatening, continues good, and Manager Miles, on whom so large a share of the responsibility has fallen, informs me that over $80,000 in cash have been received.

The cast for "Othello" will probably be the same as on the previous presentation, unless, indeed, McCullough breaks completely down. Appended is the cast of "Romeo and Juliet":

Romeo	Lawrence Barrett
Mercutio	John McCullough
Paris	T. Little
Capulet	John Lane
Benvolio	Frank Lane
Tybalt	F. C. Mosley
Friar Laurence	D. H. Langdon
Peter	F. D. Shewell
Balthasar	Albert Riddle
Apothecary	Homer Cope
Page	Percy Winter
Juliet	Mary Anderson
Nurse	Mrs. A. Dennover
Lady Capulet	Mrs. Augusta Foster

Miss Louise Dillon, of the "Esmeralda" company, goes to the Hot Springs in June for the summer. During her stay in this city she will be the guest of Mrs. Washburn.

Mr. McKee Rankin will play in "The Corsican Brothers" at Hooley's the week of May 21. Manager Hooley would not have Frederic de Belleville, so Stetson had to engage Rankin.

"The Two Orphans" was to have been played this week at the Criterion by Kate Claxton's company, but the management would not consent to raise their prices for the occasion.

One week from tomorrow evening Booth's Theatre company, headed by James O'Neill, will present "The Count of Monte Christo" at the Grand Opera House. Harry Lee is a member of the company.

Another dramatization of the life of the James brothers will be presented at the Olympic this week by Sid C. France. The brothers will be assisted in their depredations by a number of specialty artists.

And now it is reported that McKee Rankin is so much interested in the construction of his new theatre in New York that he has secured H. M. Pitt and his comedy company to fill his time at Hooley's this summer.

Thatcher, Primrose, and West's minstrels, which open at the Grand Opera-House this evening, include George Thatcher, Primrose and West, Hughey Dougherty, the three Rankins, Billy Rice, George Edwards, and Frank McNish.

Kate Claxton in "The Two Orphans" at the Academy, Katie Howard in "The Waifs of New York" at the Olympic, and the attractions at the Criterion and Lyceum close their engagements with performances this afternoon and evening.

In addition to the usual attractions at the Dime Museum this week, there will be a contest of beauty, with prizes of $500 in gold and gold and silver medals. All who attend are allowed to vote for their choice, and the contest lasts two weeks.

Frank Lane, who has been a member of John McCullough's company for several seasons, and who is a son of John A. Lane, whose Cassio at the Cincinnati Festival received such praise, is in the city. He is one of the league umpires, and will umpire the Chicago-Detroit games.

The first week of Lester Wallack's engagement at Haverly's will be devoted to "Rosedale," Mr. Wallack appearing as Elliott Gray. "Ours" will be presented during the second and last week. The company includes Harry Edwards, William Elton, Miss Ellie Wilton, and Miss Lizzie McCall.

Amusements Abroad.

Miss Minnie Palmer sails for England Tuesday to fill engagements there.

Margaret Mather closes a season of thirty-eight weeks May 12. All dates for next season have been filled.

Jeffreys-Lewis closed her season suddenly in Rochester after hearing of the death of her father in New York.

George Clarke, who has been playing Dave Hardy in "Esmeralda" at McVicker's, goes direct to New York to create the leading rôle in "The Rajah," a comedy-drama by Mr. Young, of this city, which is soon to follow "The Russian Honeymoon"—a failure.

Miss Helen Dingeon and John Gourlay have been engaged by the Vokes Family for their European tour.

Arthur Rehan has purchased the sole right of the recent Daly success, "7-20-8," for production next season.

Mme. Janauschek goes from here to San Francisco, playing at Salt Lake City and other places on the way out.

The New York Mirror has issued a number dedicated to the Cincinnati Dramatic Festival, containing appropriate articles and cuts.

M. B. Leavitt has leased the Avenue Theatre, London, for one year from July next, and will play Willie Edouin as the opening attraction.

Photographs of the scenes in "The Russian Honeymoon" were taken at the Madison Square Theatre the other night with the aid of thirty-five electric lights.

Up to date the tour of Charles Wyndham has been most profitable, Wyndham's share being over $50,000. It is probable he will remain in this country during the entire coming season.

Boucicault's new play, "The Amadam," will shortly be produced in New York, when Dion Jr. will play the principal character, instead of Dion Sr., who "created" the part in Boston.

The final performance at Booth's Theatre, New York, was given last Monday evening, the occasion being a benefit to Andrew Boyd, who had been janitor of the theatre since its opening on Feb. 3, 1869. A unique program was issued giving the cast of "Romeo and Juliet" as presented the opening night and the cast of the same play, by Modjeska's company, the last night.

MUSIC.

Review of the Week.

The most important musical events of the past week were the two concerts given by the Mozart Society. On both occasions it had the assistance of Mme. Scalchi, Mme. Schiller, and of the Chickering Quartet. While so great a dramatic artist as Mme. Scalchi necessarily suffers when heard from the concert stage instead of in grand opera, where she properly belongs, nevertheless the impression produced on her appearance last winter was justified on further hearing—i. e., that she is probably the greatest of modern contraltos. Thursday night she was suffering somewhat from a slight cold, but the wealth and breadth of her voice and its rich, sympathetic quality were fully developed. Mme. Schiller does not show any improvement since her last appearance here, although her playing is finished and technique good. The Chickering Quartet are equaled only by one other similar organization in this country, and, although it is possible to point out flaws in their work, still it is a good strong male quartet. The Mozart Club itself shows marked progress and steady improvement. If the two or three tenors who try to do all the singing could be suppressed or kept within bounds, the chorus singing would be much more satisfactory. The society is to be congratulated on its enterprise and on the evidence of growth and development it has shown during the winter.

Mr. Sherwood's piano recitals found many attentive listeners. It is pleasant to know that this excellent pianist proposes to visit Chicago again in the fall, and will (if the subscriptions warrant it) give a series of piano recitals or "conversations" to subscribers only. There ought to be no question about this enterprise, no doubt of its success, and yet it will have to be very energetically pushed if musical people really wish to have Mr. Sherwood here in the fall.

Comic opera has "held the boards" both at Hooley's and at the Grand Opera-House. Or rather let us be just to Mr. Hess' pretensions and say that he has given "light" opera, and the others "comic" opera. Bad weather, lack of novelties, and a temporary surfeit of this sort of thing has made business rather light at both places. All things considered, the presentation of "Heart and Hand" by Mr. Duff's company is the best rendition of a comic opera, vocally and dramatically, that we have had in this city. It is unfortunate that so strong an organization has so limited a repertory, and has appeared here in but a single piece. The Hess company has given several operas, but was most successful, by comparison, with "Iolanthe," which is still comparatively fresh in this city. "Chimes" has become wearisome, and when poorly rendered has no redeeming features. The apology for the gentleman who took the tenor part in "Chimes" was a bit of impertinence, since Mr. Wilkie has not been with the company for many months, and there was no "short notice" about procuring a substitute. Of the other operas the less said the better. The company is badly in need of thorough reorganization.

Dedication of the Weber Music-hall.

The new Weber Music-Hall was formally dedicated Friday evening last with a piano recital, given by Mme. Madeline Schiller. The occasion was one of invitation, and apparently every invitation was accepted, for the 400 seats in the cozy little hall were all filled and some late comers obliged to stand. It was a distinctively musical audience, for almost every music teacher and pianist of prominence in the city were in attendance, besides many amateurs and connoisseurs, who are only attracted by exceptional entertainments. It will thus be seen that Mme. Schiller had the enthusiasm which sympathy and appreciation always engender to aid her, besides that immediate contiguity which is akin to acquaintance. The result was a much more successful display of her talent, aided, of course, by a larger and more varied selection of numbers, than was shown on the evening previous at the Mozart Society's concert. It is needless to criticise Mme. Schiller. The occasion was not one to call for it, but we may say that she made a deep impression upon her auditors by her polished and artistic style of playing, which displays the outcome of immense study, as well as by the ease and facility of her technique. She seems to be an artist who is absolutely correct and splendidly finished, but lacking somehow in that subtle personal influence which goes so far to interest the listener in the player as well as in the music. Her program was well calculated to display her powers at their best, though it was long and exacting. It included the Raff Suite in E minor, op. 72; Beethoven's G major Rondo; Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor and "Charakter Stück," No. 4; the Schubert-Liszt "Soirées de Vienna"; Liszt's "Waldesrauschen"; Gottschalk's characteristic "Il Tremolo"; Beethoven's Sonata, op. 58; the A flat major and C sharp minor etudes and the A flat major Ballade of Chopin; and Liszt's showy Tarantella de "La Muette." Miss Jenny Busk added two florid numbers to the program, Eckert's "Swiss Song" (a little ancient) and Alieneff's "Russian Nightingale." A delightful surprise was given the audience between the parts. Mme. Scalchi, who was present as a guest, consented to sing, and was received with hearty enthusiasm. She sang the "Flower Song" from "Faust" in such a taking style and with such a splendid volume of voice that her listeners trespassed upon the etiquet of the occasion by asking for an encore, to which she replied with the "Drinking Song" from "Lucrezia Borgia." Though her voice is immensely powerful for so small a hall, its quality is quite as effective as in a larger room and does not suffer from nearness, while the effect of her fine presence intensifies and adds to the grand style of her singing. The occasion was a very pleasant one in every particular, and Messrs. Curtiss and Mayer, the hosts of the evening, may congratulate themselves upon a very auspicious christening. We may add that the programs were exquisitly dainty and models of good taste—a more important matter than some concert-givers seem to fancy.

Musical Attractions This Week.

Comic opera will hold the boards at but one of the city theatres this week. Commencing tonight the Catherine Lewis company, which was here a short time ago, will return to Hooley's, beginning a short season with Audran's "Olivette," in which Catherine Lewis won her laurels as a bouffe artist in comic opera many years ago. In the second act Miss Lewis will introduce the drinking song from "La Perichole." Lecocq's opera "Prince Conti" may be given during the week, as the company has tried it everywhere else. Since leaving here Mr. Greensfelder and Miss Vincent have been added to and Harry Brown and Miss West subtracted from the membership roll of this organization.

The concert season is in full blast and there any number of announcements for the next few weeks. Next Tuesday night Mrs. Jessie Bartlett-Davis and her concert troupe will appear at Central Music-Hall. Mrs. Davis has been studying hard the last winter, and, notwithstanding the many disadvantages connected with her operatic appearances, received high praise for her performances. She will sing the "Lieti Signor" from "The Huguenots," "Il Segreto" from "Lucrezia Borgia," and in a duet with Mrs. McWade. The Chickering Quartet sing several times, Messrs. Knorr and Clark have a duet, and Mlle. Ilonka De Ravasez is the pianist. Mrs. Davis should receive a hearty welcome.

Wednesday evening a complimentary concert will be given to Miss Henrietta Markstein at Weber Music-Hall. The lady is a deserving pianist who has but lately come to Chicago, and will have the assistance of several others, vocalists, pianists, and readers.

Thursday evening at Central Music-Hall Mr. W. L. Tomlins' classes of children will make their first public appearance. There is no question but that this first children's concert will fill Central Music-Hall with an interested audience. The occasion promises to mark the beginning of a new departure in musical education, and it is rather surprising that it has not been attempted before. Mr. Tomlins' idea is both simple and natural, and amounts to this, in brief: that the formation of right habits of speech and song in early youth are of the greatest importance, especially in severe climates, where wrong habits excite and anger the throat and render it easily susceptible to disease. Another point is also made in the development of the theory that association with the simpler forms of good music—at an age when the pupil is most susceptible to outside influences—stimulates instead of destroying the germs of musical development. This is proven by the fact that pupils who entered the class not only unable to sing, but unable to distinguish between a higher and a lower note, have acquired the ability to sing correctly. The children's chorus will consist of 350 voices, and they will be assisted by Miss Ettie Butler, Miss Emma Haeckle, and the Schuman Lady Quartet. Miss Florence James, to whose efforts the children owe so much, will also put them through her system of exercise—a performance in itself exceedingly interesting. Mr. George F. Root's cantata of "The Flower Queen" will be the principal program number.

The Mozart Concert Yesterday Afternoon.

It must be gratifying to an artist of the high rank universally admitted to belong to Mme. Scalchi by right of genius to appear in a great city like Chicago before such a beggarly array of empty benches as she saw in Central Music-Hall yesterday afternoon. Although it was a mistake on the part of the management not to give more variety to its matinée program, but to substantially repeat the same numbers heard last Thursday evening, that fact does not excuse the light attendance. The concert was one of the best ever given here and one that appealed especially to musical people. It was due to a society that went to so great expense to give us an opportunity to again hear Mme. Scalchi that its enterprise should receive proper encouragement. The result only shows what a sham the affectation of musical knowledge is in what is called the best society, and that our fashionable world still prefers to dance attendance upon great names rather than to gratify an artistic taste by the patronage of that which is in itself meritorious. It is humiliating to have this fact so often proved for the benefit of strangers, but so far the disease appears to be incurable, and Chicago society people will continue to stick to their fleshpots, talk ceaselessly on musical topics, and stay away from everything that needs encouragement and deserves it.

Of the concert itself there is little now to be added to what was said Friday morning. The society was weakened by the absence of several members, yet sang exceedingly well. The Chickering Quartet, despite an apparent uneven balancing of the different parts, is always thoroughly satisfactory and enjoyable. Mme. Schiller is a cold artist, yet undeniably a finished and capable pianist. Mme. Scalchi was in capital voice, and although essentially a dramatic singer, and not at her best upon the concert platform, is so far superior to most singers heard here that her every appearance awakened great enthusiasm. Her fiorito is marvelous, the range of her voice remarkable, and she is in every way a great artist gifted with an almost phenomenal voice under perfect control. In addition to her program numbers she responded to an encore with the ever popular flower song from "Faust." The Mozart Society deserves thanks for giving those who were present so genuine a treat.

OBJECTING TO A WHITE TEACHER.

[New York Herald.]—The "color line" question in public schools has received a novel illustration at Stapleton, Staten Island. A small building has been fitted up for a school for the colored children in the district. A gentleman named Trowbridge, of decidedly African cast of features, has taught at that school since it was established. A few days ago Mr. Trowbridge was prostrated by illness and could not perform his duties. The trustees assigned a young white lady to teach the children until Mr. Trowbridge should return. The forty-three scholars who attened the school at once unanimously objected to a teacher whose complexion should not be like their own, and refused to proceed with the studies. Several parents of the children waited on the Trustees and asked for a colored teacher. The officials replied that it would be difficult to procure a substitute for the few days Mr. Trowbridge expected to be absent, therefore an extra teacher was sent. The scholars all withdrew and the school has been closed until the acceptable person shall have recovered.

LOSING THEIR GRIP.

Sad Experience of Some of the Cable-Car Drivers at the Twenty-Second Street Curves.

The Auxiliary Cable Which Causes All the Trouble to Be Supplanted by an Endless Chain.

The South Side Company Well Satisfied with the Winter Work and Confident for the Future.

The man who crosses Wabash avenue at Twenty-second street on a dark night will have his attention arrested by four brilliant lines of light which are blazed into the pavement at that point. If he stops to investigate he will find that he is standing over a pit; that under the tracks, crosswalks and pavement there is not only light but more or less of life and a great deal of mechanical animation. If the man walks along Twenty-second street in an easterly direction for a distance of two blocks he will see at the Indiana avenue crossing more fiery streaks in the sidewalk, and will find beneath the pavement a pit eighteen feet in width and 225 feet in length. Descending into this pit through a trap-door on Indiana avenue the other night, a TRIBUNE reporter was permitted to inspect what is conceded to be the weakest point in the Chicago system of cable street railways. Those who patronize the Wabash and Cottage Grove avenue cars discovered months ago that the uncertain factor in their problem of transportation was the detention experienced at Twenty-second street. Over and over again the grip-car has balked there, sometimes at the Wabash avenue intersection, at others near the Indiana avenue curve. At these times the driver has stood, lever in hand, as powerless to move the cars as a babe a week old. Nine out of ten of the passengers at these times ask: "What's the matter?" The tenth man replies: "The driver has lost his grip," whereat the enlightened nine gaze with pitiless disgust upon the impotent driver. Perhaps one passenger wonders where that wretched driver lost his grip; another hopes he will find it pretty soon, and about this time horses are attached to the cars and the load is pulled through Twenty-second street.

THE AUXILIARY CABLE.

As stated, this is the weakest point in the cable system as illustrated by the Chicago City Railway Company. Running through Twenty-second street—or circling through it—between Indiana and Wabash avenues is an auxiliary cable. It is the only one in the city, the separate cable beginning at Madison street on Wabash and running around through Lake and State streets, being a loop cable. The auxiliary cable is smaller than the main one. It is kept in motion by power furnished by the main cable. The latter makes "a wrap" around a twelve-foot wheel in the big pit at Indiana avenue. Beneath this wheel is a six-foot wheel with the smaller cable which revolves at one-half the rate of speed of the main cable. When the driver of a cable dummy approaches the turn on to Twenty-second street he throws open the jaws of his grip, drops the main cable, and, after running by momentum for about ten feet, attempts to close the grip on the smaller or auxiliary cable. In the majority of these trials he succeeds, but when he doesn't the horses have to furnish the motive power.

TRYING TO CATCH ON.

It is obvious that when the driver relinquishes his hold on the main cable by throwing the grip wide open, the main cable must be conducted out of the range of the jaws of the grip, while the auxiliary cable must be thrown up into line where those jaws can close upon it. To apply the grip before the smaller cable comes in range is to come to grief; to wait a sixteenth part of a second too long is to fail entirely. This is one of the difficulties encountered at Twenty-second street. There is another. The auxiliary cable is required to make four turns within a distance covered by two blocks. The friction or wear occasioned by these sharp bearings causes strands of the cable to break, and in such cases repairs must be made at once. When the reporter had explored the subterranean passages of the pit, and, standing under a track, had seen a driver in the very act of losing his grip, he sought Asa E. Hovey, the man who laid the cable road in Chicago, and laid the case before him. Mr. Hovey said: "Yes, our principal trouble is at Twenty-second street, but we expect to overcome that difficulty; in fact, I am sure we shall."

"How?"

"There are two ways. In the first place the men who have had charge of the cable have not had sufficient experience in running in a new strand in case a strand comes out. In the second place, we could run a chain to do the same work the cable does on the auxilliary and loops."

"Why would a chain be better?"

"It would not crystallize."

"What do you mean by 'crystallize'?"

"The action of those smaller cables, making so many turns, crystallizes the outside wires or strands so that they become brittle."

"Is the strain too great?"

"Yes, it is too heavy for the bends the cable makes. I think a chain would be an improvement. You see, as the result of crystallization the end of a strand comes out, and that raises particular havoc at times."

"How do you deal with it?"

"The proper way is to run it back, chip it off, and 'draw' another in its place."

"Is that difficult?"

"Yes, it is expert work. If a man 'draws' in the strand so that it lies deep in the cable, it is as good as new. With experts we could do well even now."

MAKING A CHANGE.

"Has it been decided to make a change in the Twenty-second street cable?"

"Yes, and when that trouble is removed we shall have a perfect road. The first line of cable has now been in operation over fifteen months. In that time we have met with obstacles that were never encountered in San Francisco. There are grades in that city; here we are on a level and it was a puzzling problem with us how to take up the slack of the cable. With such a great amount of traffic and frequent heavy strains at different points, there would sometimes be a slack between cars."

"What was the effect of this?"

"Sometimes the slack would cause the cable to turn in the grip, sometimes it would 'kink' the cable between a train and the one behind it. We devised something to prevent all that and now have no trouble. At first the weather had terrors for us. In San Francisco they have no such extremely cold weather as we have here and we didn't know whether the cable would be reliable at a temperature of 20 degrees below zero. We found last winter that we could put salamanders—basins full of live coals—into the catch-basins and the grips passing along will carry the heat of the salamanders from one catch-basin to another. This keeps the snow all melted out and the cable as clean as in the summer months."

"How many of these salamanders are you obliged to use in the coldest weather?"

"Is the care of the cables a heavy item of expense?"

"Most certainly it is. If you drop into our engine-room at 2 o'clock in the morning you will find some very busy men. We run no cable-cars then, and slow down the speed of our engines to the rate of about ten revolutions a minute. This causes the cables to move very slowly, and they pass through the hands and under the eyes of experts trained to detect the slightest flaw. When you think that we have over twenty miles of cable in daily operation you must know that much time and expense are involved in its proper examination and care."

BROKEN STRANDS.

"How do you know when a strand breaks?"

"The strand, protruding from the main body of the cable, strikes a hood or treadle which responds with an alarm on a huge gong.

CLEANING.

"Are the cables cleaned daily?"

"Every inch is carefully cleansed. We use a mixture of North Carolina tar and linseed oil. This we turn on to the cables through a faucet. The average proportions of this mixture are a barrel of tar to a gallon of linseed oil, but the amounts are varied to meet weather changes. Sharp, cold weather is best for the cable. Then there is no dirt, no water. In wet weather we have to use more cable dressing, as tar and water will not mix.

"Isn't the cable liable to gum up?"

"Certainly, and in that case we use nothing but the raw linseed oil on the incoming cables. This lubricates the drum (the great wheels on which the cables revolve in the engine-room), and cuts the gum off. We are getting the care of the cable down to a science. It has run now exactly five months and seven days without repair. When you realize that the cables are daily doing the work of 880 horses this is a record to be proud of."

"What weight will the cable carry at present?"

"Each train weighs fifteen tons. We are running thirty trains—450 tons. We can move that weight comfortably and even one-third more."

"How many passengers are you carrying a month?"

FALLING INTO LINE.

"What other cities are putting in the cable road?"

"I hear that a line is to be built on Third avenue, New York. In Philadelphia it is running successfully. Kansas City and St. Louis are agitating the subject, and in London, England, they have already begun to put in the track. I have just received a letter from Henry Root, of San Francisco, who is Leland Stanford's engineer. He says: 'I have been thinking of writing to Mr. C. B. Holmes, your Superintendent, and asking him to tell me about the new splice he speaks of in his report as being so much better than the splice used here. I wish you would let me know about it, as we are going to have several important splices to make soon. All the roads here have considerable trouble from that, and we want to get the advantage of the experience of others.' I show you this letter to prove that we have made a substantial improvement on the San Francisco system."

GREEN DRIVERS.

"Have you had trouble with green grip drivers?"

Mr. Hovey laughed as he replied affirmatively: "We have had men who seemed to be bent upon cutting the cable in two every time they closed the grip. We have had men who have jerked passengers headlong the whole length of the car. But we don't experiment with green grippers any more."

SUPERINTENDENT HOLMES.

C. B. Holmes, the Superintendent of the Chicago City Railway Company, told THE TRIBUNE reporter that the severe winter through which they had recently passed had removed all doubts as to the permanent utility of the cable in a cold climate. "The frost last winter," continued the Superintendent, "was five feet six inches deep, but the operation of the cable was uninterrupted. Then, as to weather, we had every variety known to voyagers around the world. We were deluged with rain, covered with sleet, and pelted with hail. We had snow in every form—plain snow, moist snow, windy snow, sugary snow, and mealy snow. The snow that blocked the steam roads we had no difficulty in handling. Heavy rains, with everything swimming, have been followed by terribly cold weather, suddenly converting the water into ice. We went through it all without a mishap."

"But how about the expense?"

"We do not complain at that. We have discovered, I think, how to deal with the action of water and the abrasion of the grips upon the cable. We now employ ten men to oil the pullies and thirty to keep the channel or rope-chamber clean. At present we experience the most trouble with loop and auxiliary cables, especially the one at Twenty-second street. In a few weeks, however, that difficulty will be removed."

"What have you to say of the cable as a financial success?"

"I am satisfied we can make a saving over horses sufficient to pay the interest on the investment."

MAPLE BLOCKS.

On Cottage Grove avenue, near Thirty-ninth street, the reporter saw a grip taken out of a grip-car. It had made three trips and could not be used again until its jaws had been filled with maple blocks. These maple blocks play a most important part in locomotion by cable. Every grip holds sixteen of them, and experience has demonstrated that 25 cents' worth of blocks are used in each grip every twenty-four hours. Some drivers will cut out a set of blocks in two trips; others will make them last during eight round voyages. In wet weather the sand clings to the cable and cuts the blocks more readily. A careful and experienced driver will be able to save the company considerable money in the course of a year in the single item of maple blocks for the jaws of his $80 grip. The grip-drivers all have signals, and many of them manage to have a little quiet fun. At their headquarters the reporter found the following bulletin:

When the jaunty, jerky grip-car isn't gripping;
When the cable through the mable blocks is slipping,
Remember it will cost you just a dime.

DUMPING A DUDE.

As street-car passengers know, the "go-ahead signal is two bells. Sometimes when a dude hails the grip-car from the sidewalk and meanders lazily to the platform the conductor gives the man at the grip three bells, and the dude upon entering the car is jerked most familiarly into the laps of the passengers. Everybody enjoys this except the dude; but it wouldn't have happened if the dear creature hadn't loitered on the way. A driver can take hold of the cable as lightly as the down which rests upon a peach, or he can clutch it in such a way as to suggest an earthquake or a storm at sea.

HE'S GOT 'EM.

The man who crosses Wabash avenue at Twenty-second street at a late hour on a dark night, and who has his attention arrested by four brilliant lines of light blazed into the pavement, is the man to whom this article is deliberately dedicated. If he strikes this corner while rounding a period of festivity, he is liable to be haunted by the suspicion that he has "got 'em." He is liable to go home and tell his wife that he has seen the aurora borealis badly misplaced. He has certainly had a revelation from the pit—but not the bottomless one. The lights flashed upon his vision were from the chamber of the cable, and boded no such danger as the light which will presently flash from two eyes in another chamber.

A WHALE IN THE SOUND.

[New London (Con.) Day.]—About 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon, as Capt. D. G. Tinker, an old whaling-master, and one of the crew of the lightship, were coming from Bartlett's reef in the large schooner-rigged boat attached to the ship, a monster lifted itself out of the deep, and the forked spout of a right whale was cast high into the air. Capt. Tinker estimated that the whale was at least of sixty barrels capacity, and had not less than $2,000 worth of oil and bone inside his carcass. Capt. Tinker steered toward the whale, tacked and retacked after him, got within fifteen feet of him once, and within twelve feet of him again. He kept the animal in view for more than an hour, and saw him sink, rise, and spout five successive times. If there had been a bomb lance on board there were three certainties of killing the whale. It was too late when Capt. Tinker arrived in the city to return with a boat and weapons, and probably the whale is by this time navigating the temperate waters of the Gulf stream. The right whale is very seldom seen in the North Atlantic, and it is more than a hundred years since there is any record of such a fish in Long Island Sound, although it is recorded that over a quarter of a century ago parties went right whaling in the waters between Fisher's Island and Montauk Point.

THE DESCENT OF MAN.

"The Unknowable" primarily
On cosmos moved, saith history,
And protoplasm did create
Which was undifferentiate;
And inorganic was as well
With energy potential.

An evolution spirit moved
Upon the fluid mass, 'tis proved.

Then "The Unknowable" did say,
"Atoms attract," and so did they;
And from their contact were complete,
Light, electricity, and heat.

The unconditioned, it is stated,
The atoms differentiated;
Their combination made in time
The elements for every clime.

An evolution spirit went
From out the unconditioned sent,
Through protoplasm, working well,
Produced in time the organic cell.

Thence by nutrition did this cell
A germ evolve, primordial.

And germ developed protogene,
Which é-o-zoon formed between
The time the monad had its birth
And animalcules came on earth.

From these came queer ephemeræ
Then swarmed the creeping things we see.

The atom, true to Nature's rule,
In time became a molecule,
From which developed herbs and grass
And the vast vegetable class.

The animalcules came with scales
With fins for water, claws and tails,
While for the air grew wings and beaks,
And on the land for Nature's freaks
Were necessary organs sent,
The outcome of environment.

Absorption and accretion oft
Formed radiates and mollusks soft;
Begetting the articulates
From which evolved the vertebrates.

Now high the generations stand
Of vertebrates, born to command,
Which in the cosmic period thrived
When "The Unknowable" contrived
With wondrous power to evolute
The mammalian bipedal brute.

About this time all earthly men
Were gabbling monkeys; so, too, then,
The horse was a hipparion
Descendant of O-r-eo-don.

From the ascidian there ran
Aquatic kind, amphibian,
To pentadactyls giving birth,
Indigenous to parts of earth.

Selection and inheritance
Bilobates formed by law or chance,
From whence arise of every kind
The simia tribes for war designed.

The lemur now the chief became
Among all types of mammal name,
Conceived the monkey platyrhine
To whom the reign he did resign.

In time the platyrhine begat
The catarrhine and all of that.

Anthropoid apes find next a place
From whence are orangs—a fierce race.

From orangs came the chimpanzee,
And next the "What-Is-It" we see.

The "What-Is-It" went far away
Into the land of Nod one day,
And there he wooed and won for life
A lon-gim-a-nous gibbous wife.

Far wandered now this pair forlorn
Until in cosmic there were born
Anthropomorphic children bold,
Primordial types now ages old.

Prognathus and autochthon fight
Homunculus and troglodyte
And terragen, which are the plan
And sequence of primeval man.

This man went naked, and did dare
Walk unashamed with lofty air
While struggling with environments,
In his quadrumanous innocence.

Inheritance, with mighty aid
Of natural selection, made
The homogeneous type of mind
A simple yet primeval kind.

Heterogeneous next was man,
By foes beset, by beasts o'erran.

A thumb developed on the hand
For catching prey that thronged the land.

The fleetest men secured most prey,
Fleet beasts from slow men ran away.

Wherefore, it ever came about,
Slow beasts were ate, slow men starved out.

As types were differentiated
The weaker kind were dissipated.

Then tumult reigned in all the land,
Man strove with man on every hand;
Tribe fought with tribe till there arrived
The fittest men, and these survived.

Then learn 'tis fate the weakest die,
The strongest grow and multiply.

THE INDIAN WAR.

Mexican Troops Get a Chance at the Apaches Once More.

Gen. Crook Says He Will Hunt the Redskins in Accordance with the Mexican Treaty.

Possibility of Another Ute Outbreak—The Crees—Sitting-Bull and His Band "Going to Be White Folks."

The Mexican Troops Defeat the Apaches and Kill Twelve Redskins.

NEW ORLEANS, La., May 5.—A special from Hermosillo, Mexico, is as follows: An engagement occurred yesterday at Suqeach Cañon, 163 miles southeast of here, between the Apachés and Mexican troops. The Indians were defeated with a loss of twelve killed; many were wounded. The troops lost three killed and five wounded. The fight lasted one hour and forty minutes.

Awaiting the Result of Gen. Crook's Campaign in Mexico.

EL PASO, Tex., May 5.—A letter received here today from Gen. Crook's office confirms the reports of his having crossed the Mexican border on the 2d. Indian trails are being found. The utmost vigilance is impressed upon cavalry commanders, and scouting parties will be kept in the field until the result of Gen. Crook's campaign is known.

Gen. Crook Tells Gen. Sherman How He Will Pursue the Savages.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 4.—The following dispatch from Gen. Crook was received by Gen. Sherman this morning:

SAN BERNARDINO SPRINGS, A. T., May 3.—To Adjutant-General United States Army, Washington, D. C: The dispatch of the 28th ult. from Gen. Sherman received. It is not my intention to violate the convention between the two Governments. The great object in visiting Sonora and Chihuahua was to arrange for coöperation, and in case my troops followed the hostiles into Mexico to see if I could not secure a liberal interpretation of the agreement in regard to the time I could be allowed to remain there. It is my intention to start tomorrow morning in pursuit of the savages, in accordance with the treaty.

(Signed) GEORGE CROOK, Brigadier-General.

At the date of his dispatch Gen. Crook was upon the border in the extreme southern corner of the Territory of Arizona, at the point of contact of Mexico and the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. From this point the Sierra Madre range of mountains extends in a southeasterly direction, and along these mountains the hostiles are supposed to be making their way. Owing to their familiarity with the mountain fastnesses, the task of discovering and dislodging the Indians will be attended with difficulty and uncertainty.

After conferring with Gen. Sherman, Secretary Lincoln decided that it is unnecessary at present to telegraph any further instructions to Gen. Crook.

The Crees—Pushing Them Back from the Line.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 4.—[Special.]—Dispatches have been received from Col. Ilges, Eighteenth Infantry, commanding at Fort Assiniboine, Mont., which state that April 26 a courier arrived from Fort Walsh with a letter from Maj. Shurtliff, in which he says that to prevent the Crees from raiding the settlements on the American side, the Dominion Government has directed him to move them further east and north of their present location; some to the Qu'Appelle District, but the greater portion to the North Saskatchewan. Several hundred are leaving this week, and it is probable that during next month all of them will leave these hills. Maj. Shurtliff says the punishment of the Crees war party the other day will have a very good effect, as they will feel that they have more risk in crossing the line, and as they have a very limited supply of arms and ammunition they will not care to risk a fight.

Possibility of Another Ute Outbreak.

DENVER, Colo., May 4.—[Special.]—The citizens of the new County of Garfield, in the western portion of the State, which was formed by the last Legislature on account of the new carbonate discovery, have petitioned Secretary Teller to allow United States troops to remain there for their protection against Indians. It has recently become known that the Utes have become dissatisfied with their Utah reservation, and have asserted their right to the grounds from which they have been removed in Colorado. They declare that they will return to the mountains this summer, and that they will remain. Should this be their intention the movement will be very soon, and when it begins there will be again an Indian war in Colorado.

Sitting Bull and His Band of Ex-Braves.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 4.—A Chamberlain, D. T., special to the Pioneer-Press says that the steamer W. J. Baker passed today with the Sioux Chief Sitting Bull and about 150 other Indians, the remainder of his once powerful band. They are going to the Grand River, and say they are going to be white folks. He claims, however, to own all the land west of the Missouri, and asserts that he is the Big Chief. He laughed at the idea that he would sell any of it to the white man, and says the Government has set them free.

THE WASSON ROBBERY.

FORT WORTH, Tex., May 4.—[Special.]—Maj. J. R. Wasson, the United States Paymaster, who was robbed of $24,000 on the Texas & Pacific, is here to coöperate with detectives in ferreting out the robbers. The valise has been found near the line of the road, cut open and rifled of its contents. Detectives who have worked on the case have found his conduct while here to be irreproachable, giving the lie to all stories to the contrary. Col. Britton, President of the City National Bank, T. P. Stevens, a worthy cattleman of Dallas, and Conductor Gross, of the train on which Wasson was robbed, unite in saying that at no time was the Major drunk while on the train. Word comes tonight from Cleburne that two tramps have been arrested there with over $900 in gold notes of large denominations on their person, which is thought to be a clew. The railroad company has a large force of detectives at work. Word also comes tonight that a man has been arrested at Albany, a point west of here, who is thought to be one of the robbers. The belief is universal here that Maj. Wasson was followed from Galveston by crooks who knew he had the money.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., May 4.—[Special.]—Gen. Auger and other army officers at military headquarters have received information of the reported robbery of Maj. Wasson, Paymaster of the United States army. Their figures, however, place the matter at $18,000 instead of $24,000. Gen. Auger has confidence that the robbers will be caught and the money secured. A dispatch received at the department states that one party supposed to be implicated in the robbery was arrested by the Sheriff of Shackleford County near Shackleford, beyond Fort Davis, who holds him for identification. The former Paymaster at Fort Worth says that while he was Paymaster there he was continually dogged by a certain low gang, the members of which were always on his track. He could not go from his office to the bank, or from the bank to the railway, without being followed, and he was kept on the alert constantly. It is possible this same gang, or a part of it, is to blame for the present robbery. Maj. Wasson is held in the highest esteem by his fellow-officers, and not the slightest suspicion attaches to him.

EL PASO, Tex., May 4.—[Special.]—It is claimed by some that Wasson was intoxicated when he took passage on the cars, and that the money was lost by him in a place of ill-fame in Fort Worth.

GEN. RAUM'S PLACE.

Two Illinois Patriots Who Are Willing to Come in as the Beneficiary.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 5.—[Special.]—The fight for Gen. Raum's place has taken a new turn. Senator Cullom has a candidate and that candidate is David T. Littler, the Republican Representative in the Legislature from this district. The secret didn't leak out until today, and Senator Cullom took the morning train to Washington to ascertain first whether there is any chance for an Illinois man, and, in that event, to urge Littler's appointment. A vast amount of telegraphing has been going on today between Ace Matthews' legislative friends here and Matthews himself at Pittsfield. The result was Matthews' sudden appearance here this evening to get the lay of the land and find out why one Senator had apparently gone back on him. A brief consultation seemed to entirely clear up what was at first a good deal of a muddle.

It seems that Cullom some time ago voluntarily placed on file with the President a general letter of recommendation indorsing Matthews in the highest terms for anything that might come along. At that time Cullom had no idea that Raum intended to resign, and Raum's resignation was his first information on the subject. From that moment Littler, his friend and fellow-townsman, seems to have been his choice. In the meantime Logan had left with the President a letter indorsing Matthews, it is said, with special reference to an office in the revenue service. Logan has since telegraphed Matthews from New Mexico assuring him of his warm support and notifying him that he had also telegraphed the President in his behalf. Matthews recognizes Cullom's right to have a candidate of his own for the place, entertains no hard feeling against the junior Senator, and utterly deprecates the idea that any one has been acting in bad faith. He really came over to see Littler, but, arriving too late, left on the midnight train to see his friends in Chicago, where he will spend Sunday, returning here Monday. Neither Matthews nor Littler as a matter of fact is at all enthusiastic over Illinois prospects of keeping the Commissionership in the family. Both are Logan men, and both are apparently laboring under the impression that Arthur wants to be his own successor and has no use for the followers of his supposed Illinois rival. Still, if the prize is to be retained in the Illinois family, each is willing to come in as the beneficiary.

ELECTRIC DEATH.

Fatal and Fantastic Freaks of the Fiery Fluid.

WHEATON, Ill., May 5.—[Special]—A young man named Edward Wilson, in the employ of Benjamine Wimpress, living about five miles northeast of this town, was struck by lightning at noon today and instantly killed. He was a native of Linganore, Md., and had been here about two months.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., May 5.—Careful investigation shows the lightning struck the wire of the bell-rope at the Stanton air-shaft, passing down into the mine and igniting the gas. There was a similar occurrence during a storm last night at the Franklin Coal Company's slope demolishing a vast amount of timber work in the pit and doing much damage to the workings. Had the slope been in operation there would have been serious loss of life.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., May 5.—[Special.]—A man named John Sowder was struck by lightning last night at Eureka while hitching a horse in the stable. The horse was also struck and instantly killed. The man was injured so that his recovery is doubtful.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., May 5.—[Special.]—Last night about nine miles southeast, in Newton Township, the lightning struck four large barns of Russell Pierce and one of L. Dibble. The barns and a large quantity of grain, with carriages, machinery, etc., were burned. Loss, between $6,000 and $7,000; partially insured.

GRANT AND CONKLING.

SPEECHES ON MEXICO AT A BANQUET.

NEW YORK, May 5.—[Special.]—At a dinner given by the Saturday Night Club at the Brunswick Hotel, this evening, Gen. Grant made a speech. The General spoke earnestly on the subject of the relations between this country and Mexico. He said he had taken a very deep interest in the cultivation of friendly relations with our Southern neighbor. The United States had heretofore neglected a neighbor which was capable of great power of development. Its resources were simply wonderful, and the speaker hoped that henceforward, no matter which party was in power in this country, the most intimate relations would be maintained between the great and the little Republics of this continent. "We must take our neighbor under our wing," said the General, "and help her to cultivate her own great resources, teaching her that it is for her best interest to maintain a close alliance with us." There were all of the essential elements of unlimited prosperity in the two countries, and the United States and Mexico united in a friendly alliance could be so strong that in case a combined war should be made upon them by all other countries they would be able to shut themselves in their shell and sustain themselves longer than the people attacking them could do without their products.

CONKLING.

Roscoe Conkling also spoke and referred to the pleasure he felt in listening to Gen. Grant's words concerning the importance of cultivating the most intimate relations with our neighboring Republic. Seeing the soldier statesman upon this occasion, and noting the earnestness and sound judgment with which he was urging the forming of closer relations between the United States and Mexico, the speaker was led to contemplate the many things that Gen. Grant had done for his country. The ex-Senator's mind carried him back to the Chicago Convention, at which an unsuccessful attempt was made to nominate Gen. Grant for President. That was a convention to which 420 of the delegates were sent for a specific purpose, not "instructed, merely, but bound in honor to God and man to discharge certain obligations," and those obligations were to vote for the nomination of Gen. Grant for President of the United States. "I believe as firmly as I believe anything," said the speaker earnestly, "that the results of that convention have held this country back ten years. Yes, that day's work has cost this Nation in progress fully ten years." Mr. Conkling said that the Democrats were about to take control of the country. Two years ago the Republican party came out of a stoutly-fought battle victorious from sea to sea, north of the Mason and Dixon line. It fought the greatest political battle ever fought. It was a battle heavily weighted, but the Republicans rallied under their old leaders and gloriously won. That was but two years ago, and now the speaker could think of but three of the Northern States in which the Republicans were victorious. Alluding to the growth and resources of Mexico, Mr. Conkling said it might be that the ex-President of the United States would be recognized as the leader of the great movement to help the Republic of Mexico develop its resources and to bring about the natural commercial union of the two countries. "But I do not know as I ought to use the word 'leader,'" said Mr. Conkling, sarcastically. "The word 'leader' is a term of opprobrium, an epithet, nowadays. To be a leader now is to be a boss, and there is no end of men who think it desirable to deride and pull down bosses. The so-called fight against bosses is the particular form that a certain class of men give to a raid upon superiority. Point out to me a boss, and I will show you a man who, by virtue of his ability, deserves to be a boss." The ex-Senator said he hoped some of the statesmen who were undertaking to shape the affairs of this country would find time to consider the $100,000,000 of trade that awaited development in the Republic south of us.

In concluding his remarks he said that many of those who were influential in shaping the affairs of our Government were "merely playing push-pin over the rot and rubbish of low, tricky politics." Mr. Conkling's remarks elicited no demonstration whatever.

VANDERBILT.

THE ENORMOUS INFLUENCE WHICH HE EXERTS IN THE BUSINESS AFFAIRS OF AMERICA.

NEW YORK, May 5.—[Special.]—William H. Vanderbilt took passage on the White Star steamship Britannic today for Liverpool. His youngest son, George W. Vanderbilt, and his uncle, Capt. Jacob H. Vanderbilt, accompanied him. Mr. Vanderbilt came to the pier at the foot of West Sixth street in his carriage at 2:30 o'clock, and at once went on board.

"For what reason do you take the trip, Mr. Vanderbilt?"

"I had rather be on the water than here. Don't think it is on account of poor health, because it isn't."

"You are to come back by the Britannic on its return, I believe?"

"Yes, I shall come back here in four weeks, remain here four weeks, and then go to Europe again. I am going to Europe to spend July and August with my family, instead of spending the time at Saratoga, as I have done. I shall go through Switzerland while there."

"How has your health been?"

"I have been reported sick nigh unto death several times, but that is all nonsense. My health is good as it has been all along. Why [with a smile] I haven't been kept in my house but one whole day in two years, and don't think I look like a very sick man, do I? The fact is, my health is unusually good. No, I do not make the trip for my health."

"While you are in Europe will you buy any pictures?"

"I am informed by telegraph of the purchase of one for me in the Paris salon. I hope that the Americans who have purchased pictures in the salon will be allowed by a special rule to remove them, so as to bring them into the country before July, when the tariff goes into effect. I think it was a great mistake putting a tariff on works of art, and I do not believe it would have been done if the subject had been understood. When it is seen how the situation is the tariff may be taken off. It was put on I believe, on the understanding that it was for the protection of American industries. No protection is needed here, for there is really no competition, and, therefore, no need of a tariff. The effect, too, may be to deny American artists privileges abroad. They have hitherto been received in the schools, and by the masters granted every favor, and I fear the tariff will be apt to discourage these courtesies. Yes, I think it is a mistake, all on account of a lack of proper understanding of the subject."

"Your retirement from the railroads controlled by you has excited a great deal of comment and speculation."

"I suppose so [with a smile], but I know that the management of the roads has been placed in good hands. It is simply a recognition of the worth of men who have proved their capacity for the positions in which they have been placed."

"Will your interest in the roads abate?"

"Not in the slightest."

"And will the control of the roads remain as hitherto?"

"Exactly."

"It is said, you know, that you are to part or have parted with a large portion of your holdings of stock."

"Yes, I have seen that story printed, but it is not so. My opinion of the great value of the properties is not diminished in the least. They are thoroughly substantial, and there is no prospect of their prosperity declining. Besides [with a twinkle in his eye and a thought of the bear tendency of securities] this possibly might not be a very good time to sell stock. Reasons are attributed to my retirement that never occurred to me."

LAZARUS.

While Mr. Vanderbilt was standing talking with his friends a thin, rough-looking man of 30, with a haggard face, light mustache, and gray eyes, came upon the bridge and looked anxiously about. He wore a dark coat frayed at the wrists, a well-worn Derby hat, faded trousers with yellow stripes in them, and shabby shoes. He inquired of several persons where Mr. Vanderbilt was, and acted so strangely that a detective who came to the ship on a case accosted him.

"Vanderbilt drew $1,000,000 from the Chemical Bank yesterday," said he, "and retired from his railroads, but," he added in a tone of bitterness, "I suppose it is all in the family."

"It would be a pretty good steal to get that million," said the detective, desiring to find out whether the man was a thief.

"Yes," said the man, "but I don't know where he keeps it."

"In a sachel, perhaps," suggested the detective.

"May be," said the man, "but I don't know."

"Is this Vanderbilt?" said he, advancing toward Mr. Vanderbilt, who at that instant stepped out of the crowd that surrounded him. The man as he stepped forward put his hand toward his hip pocket. Mr. Vanderbilt did not see him, and, as the man spoke, retired to his cabin for a moment. The detective kept his eye on the man, to see that he did no harm, but he did not follow Mr. Vanderbilt. The man soon disappeared, and was not seen again. The incident excited some little comment, but the man was regarded more as a harmless crank than anything else, and if he had had any evil designs on Mr. Vanderbilt or his money he would not have had an opportunity to carry them out, for both he and Mr. Vanderbilt were too closely surrounded.

AT THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

The announcement today of the retirement of Mr. Vanderbilt caused a good deal of excitement at the Stock Exchange. The scene at the opening has not been equaled since the first hours of the pegging of Gould and Vanderbilt stocks on the 13th of March, 1882. Indeed, old members of the exchange say they never saw on the board a crowd greater or more eager than the one which stood at the New York Central corner of the exchange at 10 o'clock this morning. For twenty minutes before 10 there had been the wildest rumors in regard to the effect upon the stock of the Vanderbilt changes. It was stated that "no support would be given"; that "the stock would open at 120"; that "there was a panic in the stock at London"; that "a repetition of the scenes after the death of Cornelius J. Vanderbilt would occur"; that "the stock had been pegged at 123"; that "Mr. Smith's brokers were ready to take the whole of the capital stock," etc., etc. But when the hammer fell, instead of the yell expected, there was a hoarse murmur. Hundreds of hands clawed wildly, but the shout was lacking, and there was comparatively little motion in the crowd. For a dozen seconds everybody was astonished. As soon, however, as the dense crowd could be broken up, the scene became brisk enough. Traders endeavored, first, to make the opening as low as possible, and, second, to break through supporting orders in the stock. The offerings ranged from 120 to 122½. A sale was made over by the rail at 122¼, which proved to be bottom. Instantly, however, the fire of bids at 122⅝ took every share of stock offered at those figures, and resisted the strongest attempts to get lower quotations. As soon as it became apparent that the supporting orders were placed at about 122⅝ there were a series of rushes upon whoever was temporarily taking the stock. The crowd settled to the conclusion that the Smith-Hollins party had the sustaining orders in New York Central, and that Davis & Minis and Post, Wales & Co. were intrusted with the execution of a considerable portion of the amount. H. K. Enos & Co. sold freely. William Heath & Co. were sellers also. Hatch & Kendall bought several thousand shares, but their purchases were supposed to be for an outside account. The sentiment in the room seems to be that the stock will probably sell a little lower, but that short sales are not safe in view of the tremendous strength of the support. There was a good deal of curiosity yesterday to know what Mr. Vanderbilt wanted of the million dollars which were drawn from the Chemical Bank. Very little doubt on this subject exists today.

Speaking of this movement in New York Central today the New York Herald's money article says: "The big gun in this morning's market was New York Central, and it was fired off to the injury of prices generally. The retirement of Mr. William H. Vanderbilt from the Presidency was apparently regarded unfavorably upon the other side of the water, for early quotations from the London market showed a somewhat serious drop. From sympathy and a disposition upon the part of some leading bears to follow up the London weakness by a sharp 'seller sixty' attack, the price declined here also. After wavering between prices fractionally strong at one time and fractionally weak at another, the closing figures settled down to 122¼, which were the lowest of the day. In these dull times it does not take much to make an excitement, and consequently the flurry in Central & Hudson was regarded as a godsend. It all came out of the change of management. Mr. Vanderbilt retires from the Presidency, and Mr. Rutter takes his place. Whether this change is likely to benefit or injure the property was thoroughly discussed today. The decline of this morning would, upon the first blush, suggest that it was likely to prove injurious. The sober second thought, which is widely entertained, is that it will be entirely the other way. It is well known that Mr. Rutter has been the real President for years past, and that Mr. Vanderbilt has lent little more than his name to the duties of this responsible position. It is equally appreciated that, in the event of so lamentable an occurrence as the death of Mr. Vanderbilt, there would be less of a shock to the market value of the stock and, by sympathy, to the rest of the list than would be the case were not so strong a man as Mr. Rutter at the head of the concern. With regard to Mr. Newell's advancement to the Presidency of the Lake Shore, the same may be said. Wether these notions are right or wrong it is quite certain that the course of the Central in a very great degree controlled today's market.

PRESIDENTIAL TALK

BY KINSELLA, CAMDEN, AND PAGE.

NEW YORK, May 5.—[Special.]—Mr. Thomas Kinsella, of the Brooklyn Eagle, in the course of a lengthy conversation today on the political outlook, said he was convinced that the Republican party could not enter into the next Presidential contest with any hope of success. So far as the Democracy were concerned, there was no promising candidate at present. Butler would not be acceptable. His nomination, if made, would have but one end—it would serve to defeat the Democratic party. The man who tried to pass the Force bill would find no favor among the Democratic masses. Such a man would never receive the votes of honest, conscientious Democrats. Mr. Tilden had also been mentioned, but he was out of the race entirely. His physical condition was such as to preclude all possibility of his nomination. There was not much, Kinsella thought, in the attempt to "boom" McDonald. He did not know what McDonald had ever done to commend him for the position, except, perhaps, the fact that he lives in Indiana, but there was very little weight in that reason. Were it not that McDonald lives in Indiana, he would never be thought of at all. Gen. Hancock is not the man, either; first, because the Democrats do not usually nominate a man the second time, and secondly, because, as Mr. Kinsella says, "The great mass of the people desire that a statesman and not a soldier should fill the important and responsible position of President of the United States." Having run through this list, Mr. Kinsella came down to Gov. Cleveland, who, he says, is the most likely man to receive the nomination; but Gov. Cleveland is not troubling himself about it, nor is he likely to trouble himself about it.

CAMDEN.

Senator Camden, of West Virginia, was also interviewed on the Presidential nomination.

"Do you regard Gov. Cleveland as a strong candidate?"

"And Gen. Butler?"

Ex-Congressman Page, of California, now in the city, says the Republicans in that State have every prospect for success at the next Presidential election. All that is needed there is harmony in the ranks, but this does not seem to be assured right away.

"Who at the present time appears to be the strongest man for the position of standard-bearer?"

"Well, that is a leading question. If the nomination goes to the West Senator Logan, of Illinois, will be nominated without a doubt."

"Would not his nomination interfere with the plans of Secretary Lincoln, who is believed to be willing to be a candidate?"

"Mr. Lincoln will not receive the nomination, rest assured. His action on the River and Harbor bill killed his chances; that is, if he ever had any chance of being nominated."

"Senator Sherman is also spoken of; what are his prospects?"

"He will not be nominated, for Ohio will not have an opportunity to have the Presidency for many years. I do not consider that an Ohio man will be favorably received under any circumstances."

"Has not Senator Edmunds elements of strength as a candidate?"

"Oh, no. He is a good man, but only represents a little borough up in Vermont, and is not popularly known in many of the Western States, and his action on the Chinese bill is against him."

"You have not mentioned Mr. Blaine."

"Mr. Blaine could not possibly be nominated. He is very popular in certain quarters, but the antagonism between the men of whom he is the acknowledged leader and the men who are opposed to him, renders it impossible for him to receive the nomination."

FROM THE POPE.

AN AUTOGRAPH LETTER TO CARDINAL M'CLOSKEY.

NEW YORK, May 5.—[Special.]—An autograph letter was received from Pope Leo XIII. by Cardinal McCloskey yesterday acknowledging the receipt of reports of the synods of November last, as well as expressing his great pleasure in the untiring labors of the Cardinal for the Catholic cause in this country. The letter is written in Latin, and is dated from St. Peter's, Rome, April 5, 1883. It is especially gratifying to the Cardinal, as it will be to all Catholics in this country, that the letter is an autograph one. The letter was sent in the charge of a messenger. The following is a copy of the translation as prepared under the Cardinal's supervision:

To Our Beloved Son John McCloskey, Cardinal-Priest of the Holy Roman Church of the title of Sancta Maria Supra Minervam, Archbishop of New York:

BELOVED SON: Health and apostolic benediction! It was a source of very great joy to us to receive a copy of the report of the Fourth Diocese Synod of New York, held by you in your metropolitan church in November last, containing also the statutes of the preceding synods. We rejoice exceedingly, beloved son, to see that you have labored so successfully in the discharge of that duty of the pastoral office which the Holy Council of Trent has so earnestly recommended to the attention of all the Bishops, and we are filled with the firm trust that your zeal, and that of those who labor with you for the spread of the Catholic faith and worship, for the preservation of ecclesiastical discipline among clergy and laity, and for the salvation of souls, will be blessed with the richest fruits throughout your diocese. But this is only one of the evidences of your sacerdotal zeal and pastoral vigilance; your life is filled with shining examples, and we cannot permit the opportunity to pass without bestowing on some of them the well-merited testimony of our appreciation and our love. We are aware, beloved son, with what care you study to imbue the youth of your diocese, especially those destined for the service of the altar, with the sound teaching of the angelic doctor, drawn from the fountain-head after the method recommended by us. We know, too, with what increasing fidelity you, together with your clergy and faithful, have always striven to aid the apostolic see in the painful extremities into which it has been forced by the evil times and the malice of man; therefore, we have longed to express to you our deep sense of gratitude and affection, and through you to make known our gratitude and love to all those devoted children of the church who, bound to us by the bonds of filial piety, fail not, particularly in these days of trial, to second our wishes and to give evidence of their loyalty to the apostolic chair. Whilst, therefore, we offer up fervent prayers that the faithful of our illustrious diocese may learn to love God daily more and more, and that under your episcopal care and guidance their merits may increase with their numbers, we at the same time beg of God, from our heart, that He may bestow upon you abundant increase of His grace, and strengthen with power from on high your colaborers and people, and graciously grant to all who sow in blessings that of blessings also they may reap.

May our apostolic benediction, which we most affectionately in the Lord impart to you, beloved son, and to all the clergy and faithful over whom you are placed, be a pledge of Divine grace, as it is a token of our especial favor.

Given at St. Peter's, Rome, the 5th day of April, 1883, in the sixth year of our pontificate.

LEO P. P., XIII.

ELI JOHNSON.

HIS SUIT.

[New York Herald, May 4.]—The friends of Mrs. Eli Johnson, the well-known temperance advocate and philanthropist of Brooklyn, whose husband has brought suit against Mr. Henry Higley, a merchant of this city, to recover $100,000 for alienation of his wife's affection, still maintain that Mr. Johnson is somewhat insane. The lady whose character is called into question says she has no fear for the future, and that the consciousness of her innocence sustains her. She does not consider her husband worthy of belief—not even under oath. A vein of insanity, she says, runs in his family. A brother was an inmate of an insane asylum at different periods, and plaintiff is continually exercised over imaginary wrongs. Mrs. Johnson claims that her husband has not supported her for twelve years, and says that fair-minded people will suspend judgment until they hear the whole case. Mr. Higley emphatically denies the charges, and says the plaintiff must be crazed by his jealous imaginings. Mr. Johnson's counsel believes that he will be able to prove to the jury that Mrs. Johnson's affections have been alienated, and by the defendant.

MILLIONAIRES' QUARREL.

TWO BROTHERS OF WHOM MONEY MADE BITTER ENEMIES.

NEW YORK, May 5.—[Special.]—Brooklyn is enjoying another scandal today. Mr. George Brisbane, of Batavia, N. Y., was arrested on a warrant issued by Justice Walsh at the instance of a lady claiming to be his sister-in-law. Mr. Brisbane, who, although 71 years of age, is an active, vigorous man, came to Brooklyn a few days ago on a visit to Charities-Commissioner Kissam. The charge made against him is that he wrote a scurrilous letter to the plaintiff, in which he accuses her of being his brother's paramour. Between George and Albert Brisbane, both of whom are millionaires, a legal fight has been in progress for the last forty years. Interminable suits and cross-suits about property have been brought by the brothers against each other in the courts of New York and in the courts of Genesee County. The original dispute arose over a disagreement as to the disposition to be made of their father's property. Albert Brisbane is a man of some note. He was a disciple of Fourier, and has written a book on "The Destiny of Man." About ten years ago he married a Mrs. Bates, and took up his residence in Brooklyn. The ill-feeling of George Brisbane against Albert has extended to the latter's wife, and he has written her a series of letters from Batavia, addressing her always as Mrs. Bates, which have been made the basis for an action for slander, in which the damages are laid at $30,000. The papers in the slander suit were served after Brisbane's arrest on the warrant issued by Justice Walsh. In court today George Brisbane said that his brother Albert was originally married to an Italian Countess of great wealth. After a few years she procured a divorce from him. Albert Brisbane next, according to his brother's story, became intimate with a Mrs. Durand, and they lived together as man and wife for many years. Mrs. Durand's signature appears, it is said, on a number of deeds to property made out by Albert Brisbane, and it is said that she was his legal wife. George Brisbane charges that the lady who now lives with Albert Brisbane is not the latter's wife, and that he could not have married her without committing bigamy. A further complication has been added to the case by the fact that Mr. Brewster Kissam, the counsel and friend of George Brisbane, has brought an action for absolute divorce on behalf of Mrs. Durand against Albert Brisbane. George Brisbane on the charge brought against him by the lady claiming to be Mrs. Albert Brisbane waived examination and gave $500 bail to appear before the grand jury.

DIAMOND-THIEVES.

AN IMPORTANT CAPTURE—THE PLUNDER.

NEW YORK, May 5.—[Special.]—Capt. Williams sat at his desk in the Thirtieth Street Police Station late tonight guarding diamonds worth $75,000. They had been taken from a young Frenchman, Henry Marriott, and a young woman of the same nationality, who were prisoners in the station. March 9, 1883, the diamonds were stolen from Franz Kramer, a jeweler in the Rue de la Paix, in Paris. Marriott had been employed by the jeweler, and it was known quickly that he had stolen them. Before the detectives of the Rue Jerusalem could get on his track, however, he had escaped with the diamonds to London, in company with his mistress, Maria Pezux. The Scotland Yard detectives searched for the pair without success, but they learned, about the middle of April, that Marriott had sailed for New York.

Two weeks ago an officer on duty at the general post-office had his suspicions aroused by two persons. Last night he saw the woman walking rapidly down Broadway and followed her to the Battery, where she was joined by a man. He arrested the two and took them to the Thirtieth Street Station. When separated the man confessed to the robbery, and said that after it was committed in March he and his companion went to London, where they succeeded in eluding the police until about three weeks ago, when, becoming alarmed, they sailed for this country. They arrived in this city about two weeks ago. When asked where the stolen property was, Marriott, after some hesitation, stated that a portion of it was sewed up in a muff in his trunk, and the remainder was concealed in a pincushion and in an old pair of trousers in his rooms. The officer went to the house and found the property in the places named. It consisted of two necklaces, one of which he had broken up and extracted the diamonds from their settings, but the other, which contained fifty-four diamonds, was found intact. A small box was found containing twenty-four stones, a large pendant diamond, a lady's watch and chain, two gold bracelets, one gold pin, one leaf-shaped diamond pin, a pair of large earrings and a pair of diamond scales. On the woman were a diamond pin containing twelve stones, a diamond ring and a pair of gold bracelets. In the man's possession were a pair of diamond earrings, gold watch and chain, and $205 in money. One large white stone weighed thirty-six carats, was more than three-quarters of an inch through, and was valued at over $50,000.

The appointment by Chancellor Runyon, of New Jersey, of a special Master of the court to ascertain if the condition of the Central Railroad of New Jersey will justify its being taken out of a Receiver's hands has awakened much interest on the part of the holders of the defaulted income bonds, who have been waiting patiently several years for their interest money. A large portion of these income bonds are held in Europe, but the holders also who reside in this city say that there will be a united action on the part of all of the income bondholders to secure an acknowledgment and settlement of their claims. A gentleman who holds a large number of proxies said today he believed the holders of the income bonds would have no difficulty in obtaining their rights as soon as the road was taken out of the hands of a Receiver and placed under the control of a Board of Directors. Various plans are being talked of for a settlement with the income bondholders, and it is thought probable that a new mortgage bond, with past-due income dividends funded, will be offered in exchange for the defaulted bonds.

REVOLT IN A CANADIAN PRISON.

MONTREAL, Que., May 5.—[Special.]—A desperate attempt was made by five convicts in the St. Paul Penitentiary to escape Wednesday night. After getting out of their cells they gagged the keeper. The leader of the gang, Le Blanc, took a revolver belonging to the guard. In a few minutes two guards who came upon their rounds were set upon by the convicts, Le Blanc, presenting the revolver at the head of one of the keepers, called upon him to surrender. The other guard had an iron padlock in his hand weighing seven pounds, and with it he struck Le Blanc and fractured his skull so that his life is despaired of. This ended the matter. The other convicts surrendered and were locked up. Le Blanc made his escape about a year ago, but was recaptured.

SCENE IN TROY.

TROY, N. Y., May 5.—[Special.]—S. A. Craig, Police Commissioner, was horsewhipped in front of his residence last night. Craig has been acting as administrator of the estate of Rufus Lape. A brother of the latter drove to Craig's house and instructed a boy to call him out. Craig advanced to the carriage, when Lape charged him with not giving satisfaction as administrator of his brothers' affairs. Craig called Lape a hard name, whereupon he raised his whip and slashed it vigorously about Craig's head and body. The Commissioner wrenched the whip from Lape's grasp, and, although smarting with pain, remarked: "I'm too much of a man to strike an old fellow like you." Craig then broke the whip into pieces, threw them into Lape's carriage, and turned to his house.

BEN BUTLER'S APPEAL.

The Redoubtable Governor Has Caught a Tartar in Sanborn.

BOSTON, Mass., May 5.—Gov. Butler has sent a long letter to the Board of Health, in which, after citing the correspondence addressed to him by Sanborn, Secretary of the board, in February last, in relation to his (the Governor's) inquiries as to the number of dead bodies sold from Tewksbury, he claims Sanborn's letter, inclosed, is unparalleled as a piece of impertinence. He was so convinced as to the impropriety of this letter that on the 21st of February he dictated a letter to the Chairman of the board, which upon reflection he did not send, for various reasons. He also received another letter from Sanborn, dated May 1, which he also considered so impertinent that he requested Sanborn to address him no further communications upon any subject, except in answer to inquiries. The Governor says: "Notwithstanding this, I received another letter from Sanborn stating that the Attorney-General had given the board two opinions. One opinion was not given to the board, but to the Executive, and the other was entirely unofficial." He appeals to the board to require Sanborn to cease from distracting the attention of the Executive from other important and laborious duties by continual impertinent and unsought correspondence. He cannot refuse to receive communications from him so long as he is the organ of the board, and he is loath to refuse all communications from the board, and should only do so as a last measure of self-defense. He does not consider Sanborn an officer of the Government. His appointment was not consented to by any Governor since 1879. Neither has he taken the oaths required by the laws of the State necessary to qualify him as an officer. Such being his condition he cannot consent to Sanborn's acting further as Secretary of the board, nor can he allow any money to be drawn from the Treasury to be used under his direction.

The State Board of Health, Lunacy, and Charity adopted a letter in reply to a previous communication by the Governor reasserting that the previous Attorney-Generals have furnished opinions when requested by the officers and members of the board, and commenting on the letter written by the Governor the 3d inst. as couched in language unparalleled in its character in the history of the Executive in corresponding with any department of its Government.

BAD FOR LOW-GRADE TEAS

San Francisco Merchants Will Not Order Poor Tea-Leaves at Present.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 5.—Tea merchants are dissatisfied with Assistant Secretary New's reply to their request asking for information respecting how the new tea duties should be interpreted. They think no decision should be given until in course of importation teas are seized and held until a test be made. As a consequence merchants are not ordering any low-grade teas, fearing the Government will confiscate them. Had the Secretary decided on samples sent him grades approved by him could have been safely imported. Demoralization in the tea trade is expected.

A WOMAN-KILLER.

Detestable Crime and Suicide of the Criminal.

WORCESTER, Mass., May 5.—Late this afternoon Frank Mann, of Oxford, shot Mrs. Mary E. Moore, of Millbury, in James Dean's boarding-house at Millbury. He then shot himself. Both are dead. Mrs. Moore had been separated from her husband, who keeps a livery-stable at Grafton. She was expecting a divorce, and meantime received the attentions of Mann, who was 40 or 50 years old. He boarded at North Oxford with Mrs. Hayden, mother of Mrs. Moore. The two quarreled. Mann was a widower and had one living child. Moore also had a child.

A RAILWAY COLLISION.

Fifteen Smashed Cars and a Badly-Battered Brakeman.

EAST SAGINAW, Mich., May 5.—A freight-train on the AuSable & Pére Marquette Railroad was coming up from Bay City this evening and the Toledo express, which leaves Bay City at 10 o'clock, but which was twenty minutes late, ran into the freight, smashing the locomotive of the passenger-train and fifteen freight-cars.

The engineer and the fireman of the passenger-train saved their lives by jumping. The engineer was slightly hurt, and a brakeman named Isaac Greenshaw considerably.

LATE LOCAL ITEMS.

J. A. Stansbury, whose office is in the Central Block, on Market street, and who is a manufacturer of clock-work machinery of various sorts, reported at police headquarters last night that Thomas Burns, a young man who has been in his employ for some time, had skipped out, taking with him $300 worth of finished machines. Detectives were detailed to hunt the young man up.

William Hanson, a Norwegian, 53 years of age who has been separated from his wife for five years, and who drank heavily and made frequent visits to her at No. 182 North Peoria street where she has kept a boarding-house, went around there at midnight and hung himself to the knob of a rear door. His body was discovered by some neighbors who notified the police, who took it to the morgue and notified the Coroner.

John Martin, the tramp "lover" of a notorious woman named Ann Vickers, known as Big Annie, became suddenly wealthy about the same time that she lost $600. Putting the two together she concluded that he had stolen it, so she had him arrested and locked up at the armory.

Frank Balloin, who in January last committed a small burglary on State street, by which he netted $165, was caught yesterday by Detectives McDonald and Gallagher, and locked up at the armory.

Albert M. Day and Fred Burkmam, caught in the act of stealing a pocket-book from a lady in The Fair, were arrested by one of Pinkerton's watchmen yesterday and turned over to Detectives Elliott and Wiley, who locked them up at the armory.

WYANDOTTE POST-OFFICE, IN KANSAS.

WYANDOTTE, Kan., May 5.—[Special.]—The Kansas City Times publishes a lengthy article this morning setting forth that George B. Reicheneker, Postmaster at this place, is deficient in his accounts to the amount of $2,200. The shortage was discovered about two days ago by Post-Office-Inspector Crowell, but the affair had been kept secret until yesterday. The Postmaster strongly denies any guilt, saying that the shortage is due to clerical errors, and that everything will be found all right when the examination of the books is completed. The discrepancy occurred in the stamp department. Mr. Reicheneker was appointed Postmaster in March, 1881, before which he was employed as route agent. The shortage has been made good by his bondsmen, and it is probable that he will remain in his present position until the expiration of his term of office. The Times states that he was compelled to contribute largely to the campaign funds, but such is not believed to be the case, as he has never been prominently engaged in political management. The general impression is that his statement is correct, and that affairs will be satisfactorily settled.

JAY GOULD'S MOVEMENTS.

HALF-INTEREST FRAUDS

Inducements Held Out to Invest in the Square Target-Traps for the Unwary.

Some three months ago THE TRIBUNE thoroughly exposed a system of swindling which is practiced in the city with much success, and which is known as the "half-interest" fraud. The exposé knocked the bottom out of a few of the most glaring of these swindles, those who were engaged in them being thereby obliged to shift their quarters and devise other traps for the unwary. The same old games, however, turn up day after day in one form or another—old frauds with new faces—and it is about time to call a halt once more and sound a note of warning.

THE PATENT A WASHING-STOOL.

This advertisement caught a TRIBUNE reporter's eye, and the address—151 Monroe street—struck him as a new one. Similar "ads" appeared for months for 167 Clark, 116 Randolph, and Room 15 Exchange Building. The first two were bogus employment bureaus and the latter a bogus real-estate office, all with half-interests to sell, and all closed up since their exposure in THE TRIBUNE columns. Yesterday afternoon the reporter called at the address given, and in the gentleman who wanted the $125 he recognized an old acquaintance. The recognition was not mutual, though. In explanation of the advertisement the gentleman said he had a patent right in a stool for washtubs to rest on, and in order to get the business started he wanted a partner with a small capital who would take part in the work. The stool, he said, would bring an immense profit—when the patents were completed. He exhibited a small model of the stool in polished oak, the invention being in having the feet attached by hinges instead of being nailed solid in the ordinary way. The idea was to economize space in small houses. When washing-day ended the big, awkward stool was in the tidy housekeeper's way, not being wanted for another week, but now the inventive genius of a new era changes all that, and the ugly washing-stool is folded up, hung on a nail in the wall, and transformed into an esthetic piece of interior decoration. In response to the reporter's inquiries the gentleman said his name was Reynolds, that he had been two months in the office, that the regular legal processes were being gone through to procure a patent for the stool, and that in that there oak model, folded to carry in the vest-pocket, lay the nucleus of a little Jay-Gould fortune. Partnership and half-interest in the invention for the paltry sum of $125.

AN OLD FRIEND.

"Mr. Reynolds," said the reporter, "were you ever in the glass-silvering business?"

It took Mr. Reynolds a full minute to search for something, which turned out to be a cigar-stump, among his papers before he replied.

"What do you mean?" he said.

"Have you been engaged in the business of quicksilvering glass for mirrors, you and a partner, in a basement on Clark street?"

Mr. Reynolds opened his eyes very wide and replied: "Never! Why do you think so? Do you mean making mirrors?"

"No, sir; I don't. Do you know a man named J. Granger?"

"Did ever you go by another name?"

"Never!"

"Did ever THE TRIBUNE write you up?"

"Never!"

"Do you occasionally visit mock-auction shops?"

"Never!"

Mr. Reynolds was virtuously indignant by this time.

"It's just this," explained the reporter, "last time I saw you you were in an alleged silvering establishment. Your business was exceedingly valuable—a sort of secret monopoly. You would not take $1,000 for your share in it—so you said. You had a partner, however, who was retiring, and would give his valuable half-interest for a mere song—a paltry $250. Your factory was the basement of 265 Clark street, and your outfit was valued at about $5. You had the place rented for a month, and your mode of operation was to rope in a stranger for all you could get, and then you and your partner skip to some other location, leaving the erstwhile possessor of $150 or $200 the sole proprietor of two empty tins, some broken glass, a cracked mirror, and 10 cents' worth of whiting. You sold half the business and voluntarily made a present of the other half. You roped in an innocent German for $150 some time ago. Your little game still goes on, its present location being 135 North Clark street, and the new name of the firm being Bennett & Wilson. Have it down fine, eh? And the folding washtub—I mean stool—is a new and interesting item in the program."

Mr. Reynolds was too gentlemanly to swear, but he looked unutterable things. Then he smiled.

"Yes," he said, "I'm the man who is in the silvering biz, and you are THE TRIBUNE man who wrote me up. You did not give me fair play, though. Why, that outfit was worth more than $4—that's what you valued it at in the report. I never roped in any German—you was wrong in that. It was an Englishman I sold out to. I may as well tell you the truth frankly. I was taken in myself, and I wanted to get back my money. No, I cannot tell you who sold to me. Granger was my partner's name—not mine. We were only four weeks or so in the thing. The business is a square trade; the glass can be silvered, but the trouble is that nobody will buy it when it is silvered. The manufacturers can silver their own glass cheaper than outsiders, and there is nobody else to buy. But it's a good trade. I don't know who Bennett & Wilson is. I skipped out when I made the sale, and was glad to get rid of it. No, I cannot give you any references. Yes, I do occasionally knock about gambling-houses, but the best of people do the same."

The remark about the references came forth in reply to the reporter's proposal to say nothing more about the glass-silvering if Mr. Reynolds would give any reference as to character or the former business he had been engaged in. The patent wash-stool is still for sale. The glass-silvering fraud referred to has been restarted at 135 North Clark street within the last two weeks. The bait is ready and the sucker is waited for. The "half-interest-$250-no-opposition-pays-$60-a-week-parties-retiring-because-of-ill-health" advertisement can be found with slightly varying wordings in an afternoon sheet every day in the week. The reporter called at this address on two occasions, but each time an "At Dinner" ticket was fastened on the door. It takes Bennett & Wilson at least three hours to take his dinner.

The advertising by parties of this kind is mostly done through a snide "business-chance" office, to whom the would-be buyer must apply in the first instance. As the business-chance man is a partner in the fraud, he contrives to have the alleged partners notified privately, so they can be in the "factory" and hard at work when the sucker calls to examine. The place referred to is alleged to be run by a person named Granger, whom Reynolds says was his partner on Clark street. The reporter, however, is certain that the Reynolds at 151 Monroe gave him the name of Granger three months ago, while the partner, now asserted to be Granger, was introduced as Reynolds. Two more members of the same gang call themselves Roberts and Thomas, but which of the quartet it is that is now taking a turn at the silvering racket under the name of Bennett & Wilson the reporter cannot say until the gentleman gets back from dinner. Mr. Harry Arthur, real-estate-and-renting and business-chances-a-specialty man, seems to be a popular agent with fraudulent half-interest men. Mr. Arthur's office was three months ago at 167 Clark street, but since THE TRIBUNE exposed his connection with half a dozen different bogus partnerships he has moved to 85 Dearborn street. Samples of his offers for the last day or two may be given:

PALPABLE FRAUDS.

WANTED—YOUNG MAN WITH $85 TO TAKE interest in light manufacturing; pays $15 weekly; experience not essential. 85 Dearborn-st., Room 8.

$250 BUYS RETIRING PARTNER'S HALF of established legitimate business, paying [illegible] per cent profits; orders months ahead. 85 Dearborn-st., Room 8.

$225 TAKES HALF OF ESTABLISHED pleasant business; will pay buyer $100 monthly; orders ahead; average ability required. 85 Dearborn-st., Room 8.

It is unnecessary to tell any one who knows the city that these three "ads" represent a trio of palpable frauds, intended to catch unsophisticated strangers.

THE SQUARE TARGET.

The proprietor here is Mr. James Ward, who says he was a physician in Chicago for eighteen years. He has invented what he calls a "square target." A sheet of paper about ten inches by eight is marked with rectangular and diagonal lines, being thereby divided into irregular sections of triangles and squares. Each section has a different number. The paper is pasted on a piece of board, a hole bored in the centre, a yard of rubber string drawn through the hole and held by a knot at the end, a piece of stick with a pin in it called a dart is fastened to the other end, you point the dart toward the target and pull the string, and the dart sticks in one of the numbered sections. This invention is expected to supersede the use of dice in saloons—no more will loaded ivories decide who is to foot the bill, and the dear old familiar phrase "throw for the drinks" will undergo an alteration to suit the science of a more enlightened age. Mr. Ward wants a new partner to share the spoil. He has a partner already, a Mr. Huber, but Mr. Huber has not the necessary time to devote to the new business, and will sell out his half interest, so to Mr. Huber the reporter was referred. It might be stated that Mr. Ward's factory in the rear basement contains nearly $4 worth of lumber ready to begin work on as soon as the partner is secured. The "business-already-established-pays-$10-to-$20-a-day" part of the advertisement is a sort of metaphorical phrase illustrative of Mr. Wood's imaginative genius. B. F. Huber, t'other partner, has a real estate and renting agency at 137 Madison—so his card says—and here the reporter called on him. Yes, he owned a half interest in the "square target" invention, he said. They hoped to get it copyrighted, maybe patented. He wanted $300 for it and had been much surprised to learn that Ward had advertised it for $150. And so on, the same old foolishness. When Mr. Huber was informed who the applicant was he undertook to prove that the invention had cost much money to perfect and would be a big bonanza to those who would carry it out, but he did not convince THE TRIBUNE man to any remarkable extent. In fact his "proofs" proved only the exceeding shallowness of the thing, and showed how wondrously credulous the credulous fools must be who invest in these so-called patent inventions.

But the commonest system of working the half-interest dodge is by advertising over initials and meeting the sucker by appointment. Partnerships in "established" businesses, valued at from $100 to $5,000, are daily offered in the papers—"Address X Y 365, office of this paper"—seven-eighths of which are bogus. A neatly put-up job, a gentlemanly manner, and a plausible tongue make the swindles occasionally successful—often enough to make them paying. The genuine "ad" cannot be distinguished from the bogus, and the only safe rule for the investor is to hold his money until he has reliable references and has made a thorough investigation.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Arrest of Mr. and Mrs. Heintz Under Peculiar Circumstances.

Quite an exciting little episode occurred yesterday afternoon between 3 and 4 o'clock on State street in front of Matson's jewelry store, and attracted a crowd of interested spectators. Two young and well-dressed men were passing the store when a veiled figure, apparently that of an old woman, rushed out and caught hold of one of the men and began talking and gesticulating in the wildest manner. The young man exhibited considerable surprise at first, but seemed to grasp the situation suddenly, and then his talk and actions became as wild as those of the woman. From the voice and manners of the latter it was easily discernible that she was not an old woman, but a young and very lively one. Her peculiar garb was only one of disguise. The young couple were accusing each other of all sorts of things when a policeman appeared on the scene. A young man who had emerged from Matson's told the officer that the woman had been robbed by the man whose coat-collar she had grasped, but the latter asked to have the woman arrested. The officer decided to take both man and woman in charge, and after placing them under arrest he called a patrol wagon. In this the prisoners were conveyed to the Harrison Street Station and locked up on the charge of disorderly conduct.

HIS STORY.

The name of the young man is Reginald P. Heintz, and the woman is his wife, Emma Heintz. He is 25 years old, has a red mustache, and "Hinglish" accent, and claims that he is a journalist employed by a city paper. His wife is 28 years old and has a temper. The couple were married two years ago in New York, and, judging from the story related by the husband yesterday afternoon as he stood with his kid-gloved hands clutching the bars of his cell, their married life has not been unalloyed bliss. Heintz says his wife is a virago, and he exhibits some scars on his face which are alleged to have been caused by the finger-nails of his better half. Last October, as his story runs, while the couple were rooming at No. 263 West Madison street, Heintz was taken sick. He was then connected with the Chicago World, a dramatic paper. Before he left the sick-bed he sent his wife down to the World office to draw some money. She learned at that office that some actress had called on her husband. Forthwith she purchased a revolver, and hurrying home fired a shot at Heintz as he lay in bed. The aim was bad, and the man was not hurt. Mrs. Heintz was arrested, but her husband refused to prosecute and managed to have the affair hushed up. Last Monday Heintz left his wife, claiming that with her violent temper she made his life unbearable. He called on Mr. A. S. Trude then, and made arrangements to get a divorce. After leaving his wife he established himself in a room not far from Matson's. He claims that she found out where the room was, and, disguising herself as an old woman, established herself in the jewelry-store yesterday to watch for him. He also claims that there is a clerk in Matson's who takes considerable interest in her affairs. When Heintz left his wife he broke open a trunk to get some of his clothes, and, as he alleges, this started the story that he had robbed his wife.

Mrs. Heintz, who has a decided Jewish cast of countenance and is prepossessing in appearance, was averse to talking about her domestic affairs. When asked if she was arrested last fall for shooting at her husband she said she could not remember.

THE BRITISH CONSUL NEEDED.

Heintz felt very much hurt at being treated "like a common criminal, sir!" and asked that the British Consul be sent to him. "Because," he explained, "I am a British subject and ought to be protected." Nevertheless Mr. Heintz and an English chum were arrested Friday night for being drunk, and were fined $3 each yesterday by Justice Hammer. Heintz had not been long from the court-room when he met his wife. The gentleman with him at the time Mrs. Heintz presented herself in such a surprising manner was one of Col. Mapleson's sons.

A SCENE IN COURT.

The following anecdote is said to be literally true of an eminent lawyer:

The gentleman in question, who was then quite young, was retained as advocate in a case on which, not feeling himself sufficiently prepared to plead, he was very desirous of obtaining a postponement. As, however, the court had already protracted its session beyond the usual period in consequence of an unusual amount of business, and of course the jury were getting impatient to be released from their duress, he was well aware that it would be impossible to procure such a postponement unless he could allege some extraordinary cause.

Fortunately, or unfortunately as the result proved, he had a lively imagination, and had quickly formed a plan which he was sure would be successful.

Rising, with his handkerchief to his eyes, he addressed the court in great apparent emotion: "May it please the court, I have just heard of the dangerous illness of my venerable mother, who is lying at the point of death. Under such circumstances, much as I regret protracting an already lengthened session, I must request that this case be postponed. My feelings are so powerfully agitated that I should be unable to do justice to the case, feeling as I do that my proper place is at the bedside of my mother."

The pathetic appeal was completely successful. A feeling of earnest sympathy for the afflicted counsel pervaded all hearts, and the jurors, though anxious to return to their families, were not sufficiently hard of heart to wish to have the business of the court proceed at such a sacrifice of personal feelings.

The Judge, who was a tender-hearted man, had risen, and was about to grant the request of the counsel, when the deep hush was broken by a shrill voice, which proceeded from a lady in a Quaker bonnet, who was bending over the railing of the gallery. It was the mother of the eloquent counsel, who, so far from being at the point of death, came without her son's knowledge to hear him plead.

"Timothy, Timothy," she exclaimed, in a voice which could be heard all over the house—"Timothy, Timothy, how often have I chastised thee for lying?"

It is needless to say that the court-room fairly shook with laughter, and the eloquent counsel, the late Timothy Coffin, sat down completely nonplussed.

The case wasn't postponed.

TRACK TALK.

BOSTON, Mass., May 5.—[Special.]—The six days' race for $2,000 between Charles Leroy on horseback and John S. Prince and William Woodside, alternating on bicycles, closed tonight at the Casino. An audience of 8,000 to 10,000 people was present and cheered the contestants lustily. At the start today the horses had nearly 39 miles lead, and Prince was very stiff and sore, but Woodside was in fine condition. Prince went on the track first, and consequently Woodside closed, both doing their best on their last hour. From 8:30 to 9:30 this evening Prince put in 16½ miles, and from 9:30 to 10:30 Woodside piled up 17, cutting down the lead of the horses 6 miles. Leroy's score for the day was 126½ miles, Prince's 48, and Woodside's 85. The total score was: Horses 921 miles, bicycles 899, of which Prince made 414 and Woodside 485. The score by miles for the bicyclists today was as follows:

Prince—First hour, 13 miles 2 laps; third hour, 9 miles 2 laps; fifth hour, 3 miles 4 laps; seventh hour, 5 miles 1 lap; ninth hour, 16 miles 3 laps. Woodside—Second hour, 17 miles 2 laps; fourth hour, 17 miles 2 laps; sixth hour, 16 miles 4 laps; eighth hour, 16 miles 4 laps; tenth hour, 17 miles, making a total for the bicycles of 133 miles.

As the finish drew near the contestants frequently spurted and the excitement of the spectators grew intense. They crowded around the track and bought skate-checks to get on to the floor inside the track, long after the supply of skates had been exhausted, and regardless of their ability to skate, in order to get a better view of the contest. Prince's plucky riding in his stiff and painful state was highly praised. Leroy changed horses about every two miles.

Gov. Sprague Defeated by Death—A Loss to Trotting-Horse Breeders.

LEXINGTON, Ky., May 5.—[Special.]—Gov. Sprague, the well-known trotting stallion, died at the farm of R. P. Todhunter, near this city, of pleuro-pneumonia, aged 12 years. He was a black horse, 16¼ hands, by Rhode Island, dam Belle Brandon. At 5 years old he made a record of 2:20½ at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and several years ago was sold by Mr. Higbie, his owner, to J. I. Case, of Racine, Wis., owner of Jay-Eye-See, for the fabulous sum of $27,500. The best of his get are Gen. Sprague, 2:18, Kate Sprague and George Sprague, 2:18. His death is a serious loss to trotting-horse breeders. His earnings last year amounted to over $10,000.

Running in Hoof-Deep Mud on the Pacific Slope.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 5.—The fifth day of the races of the Pacific Coast Blood-Horse Association at Oakland Course found the track very heavy and dangerous with hoof-deep mud. The dash, five-eights of a mile, for 2-year-olds, E. J. Baldwin's Grinstead filley walked over for forfeits.

The two-mile dash between Sam Stevenson and Atalanta was won by Stevenson. Time, 4:16.

There will be an extra day Wednesday next or the first good day and good track.

A FOUL MURDER.

CLINTON, Mo., May 5.—William Nichols, a traveling salesman for the machinery firm of Cockrell & Co., of Dallas, Tex., was shot and killed this evening by Charles K. Adams on an east-bound passenger-train as it was approaching Montrose, twelve miles from here. It is thought that Adams is a crank, and had been drinking. He is said to hail from Carrollton, Ill.

DALLAS, Tex., May 5.—[Special.]—William Nichols, of this city, shot on a train in Missouri, was a German about 40 years of age, and well known throughout this portion of the State, being a very skillful millwright. He was not a commercial traveler, as the Associated Press states, but was en route to St. Louis with Frank Cockrell, of the Todd Mills, of this city, to assist in the purchase of additional machinery for the mills. Nichols was a jovial free-handed fellow, perfectly inoffensive, and his death is universally deplored here. He leaves a young wife whom he married a few months since.

CARROLLTON, Ill., May 5.—[Special.]—Charles Adams, who shot and killed William Nichols on the railroad train near Montrose yesterday, was, as he says, born and raised in this (Greene) county, a few miles from this city. His father's name was Richard Adams, who, with Adams' mother, has been dead for about twenty years. He has three brothers, William, James, and Benjamin, still living in this county. He is 30 years old, and by all who knew him was considered a quiet, peaceable, and inoffensive kind of a man, kind and not of quarrelsome disposition. By everybody he was considered a brave man, certain to defend himself when imposed on. He was a single man, and left here about eighteen months ago with the purpose of locating in the State of Missouri. It is predicted here that, upon all the facts coming out in this killing, it will be seen that Nichols was the aggressor.

A MONOPOLY IN MATCHES.

The Diamond Combination Capture a Rival Factory—Great Profits.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 3.—A match manufacturer of this city said today that it was understood that the Ives & Judd Match-Factory, of Cheshire, had been purchased by the Diamond Match Company, which has already swallowed up many other concerns, and has virtually a monopoly of the business in this country. It has been stated that there are no match-factories outside the Diamond combination except one in Maine, makers of matches in the card fashion, who have gained business by representing that they are independent and struggling to keep down prices. The New Haven manufacturer stated that this was not true.

"There are other concerns," he said, "outside the monopoly, and the same kind of matches is made, too. There are a few in New Jersey. The Cheshire concern was outside the combination. It is reported that they sold out to the Diamond Company for $50,000. It is supposed that the manufacturers in the combination will reduce their prices very little after July 1, in consequence of the withdrawal of the stamp tax. At present there are $1.44 worth of stamps on a gross. This, after July 1, will go into the manufacturers' profits and help swell the already big profits. It costs the company, freight paid, $1.75 to get a gross to New York. That is for the poorest kind—what is called plug. They are sold for $2.40 a gross. The difference—65 cents—is the profit, and as the product is very large the profit is immense. After the 1st of July, when the tax ceases, the profit will be much larger. Of this $1.75—the cost of a gross in New York—$1.30 is for Government stamps. There are $1.44 worth of stamps used, but under the rule of a 10 per cent discount the cost is only $1.30.

"This leaves the cost, less the stamps, at 45 cents a gross. Now, when the stamp law is taken off, this expense of $1.30 is removed, so that the profit will be $1.95 a gross, instead of 65 cents, as now. The prices may be reduced, but not much. I know of no remedy for consumers except that of people who can't afford to buy shoes—they can go barefoot. The people must go without matches if they don't like the prices."

A SEASIDE FLIRTATION.

Jack Evans' Little Adventure on the Coast of Maine.

[Harper's Bazar.]—It was off on the Maine coast, some miles from any point considered exposed to what is ordinarily termed the rush of summer travel. Certainly the idea of a rush was something utterly foreign to this blessed placidity of sky, and shore, and sea. A few boldly outlined rocks seemed to have been placed along the shore for the purpose of keeping guard, but, like sentries in time of peace, had rather lost the spirit of the occasion, and were sunning themselves in lazy indifference. A gray haze hung over the sea, making impossible the blinding diamond glitter of a sunny day. One's artistic soul was satisfied with the quiet tone of the whole visible world. Everything was soothing, everything was harmonious, everything—until, with a shock that seemed to break the delicious loneliness of the scene, and scatter visions of eternal quiet with sky, and sand and sea, one's startled eyes fell upon a blotch of scarlet staring above a fragment of rock with an air of utter irrelevance, if not positive irreverence. One felt rather than saw that it was a parasol—a large, red parasol. It was so very large and so very red that in this dignified calm it produced the effect that would the sudden entrance, not to say bounce, of a rosy milkmaid into a circle of esthetically-cultured maiden ladies. The thing might be good of its kind, but it jarred; it had too purely a human interest. It was worse, even. One might look at the sea as long as one chose, but one's gaze would inevitably come back to that parasol. It made one angry; it was parvenu, impertinent, insolent.

"Striped too, by Jove!" he muttered, as though the audacity of the thing grew upon him. "There can be but one person under it; not that there is a physical impossibility of there being two" and he smiled cynically as one who has seen the folly of it—"but these are the wilds of Maine, and the woods are certainly not full of striped red silk umbrellas. There's but one woman in the village who owns such a barbaric article as that yonder, and she's alone. Nice day for an afternoon on the sands—none of that confounded glare that sets your teeth on edge and makes the lot of a clam seem the only happy one, provided he's insured against being dug out. Rather glad I'm not a clam, though; generally speaking, beastly sort of life not to be able to walk around and look under red silk umbrellas. My ideas are certainly formulating themselves after the fashion of Alice in the Wonder-Land. By the way, I wasn't at all sure that I had come out to look under that one, but it's rather borne in upon me at present that I haven't much to live for except the pleasure of making that girl's acquaintance. Might go back to the farm and get a letter of introduction. I don't think she saw me at all; she didn't look across the way once—not that that's any sign, though. I only saw the parasol and the round of her chin, and six-button undressed kids, as she came down the walk. Poetical justice would demand that as I am a city dweller, weary of the haunts of fashion and the giddy round of social pleasure, I should seek diversion and true happiness in the society of a dairy-maid. But even city life has its alleviations, and merely as a setting for a picturesque toilet the country knocks the spots out of a ball-room. How the dickens does she come to be up here alone, I wonder! Perhaps, after all, she's a country beauty who has been to boarding-school. If those gloves should be the only pair she ever had, and that parasol a wild dash after the absurdities of fashion, and not merely a quietly accepted eccentricity! But it can't be; she's one of those people who always do right; I know by her chin."

Meanwhile Evans had tossed away his cigar and drawn very near to the rock, on the other side of which sat the owner of the parasol, but still no motion betrayed any knowledge of his approach. He had serious thoughts of attempting a cough, but this time-honored device always struck him as absurd. Skipping stones would do as a makeshift, but he finally decided upon more audibly crunching the sand under his feet. The mind the other side of the rock had meanwhile not been a blank.

"I knew he would come," had been its owner's quiet conclusion as she settled herself to the beginning of another chapter after a cautious survey of Evans while he was yet far up the beach. "Can't see any particular harm in making his acquaintance. I know all about him. We're out of civilization now, besides. I wonder if he'll take a very decided initiative. If he does not, he isn't the man I think he is. Of course he may stalk by, just as if he always saw young ladies sitting on the sand in the immediate neighborhood of the forest primeval, but I don't believe it; and, to be perfectly frank, I shall be horribly disappointed if he does. Indeed, in that case I couldn't answer for myself; I should very probably throw something at him. He has thrown away his cigar—that's a good sign."

The sand grated harshly.

"I couldn't with any decency help hearing that," and she dropped her parasol in front of her, and glanced around over her shoulder. It was excellently done—glances of any kind were rather in her line. In this one there was just the necessary curiosity as to who might be the disturber of her solitude mingled with a not unnatural surprise at its turning out to be an intruder from the confines of civilization, and over it all a delicate shade of utter indifference as to who this intruder really was. What was it to her, in any case? All this was in it, and an instant sufficed to deliver it. Then she turned slowly away again, raised her parasol, and turned over a leaf of her novel.

"No pride of the village looked at me that time," thought Evans. "That's not the way the pride of the village does it. I feel rather sat upon, yet not utterly annihilated; cast down, as it were, yet not destroyed; perplexed, but not in despair. But what's to be done next? One must be careful, very careful; the whole danger will be in overdoing it. She has a pistol by her side, and a box of cartridges, so it will be superfluous to offer her any protection against the jelly-fish. Bloodthirsty, I see. However, she don't look like the sort of woman that fires behind her by mistake, so I'm probably safe where I am. Confound her self-possession! I feel like an ass. I can't stand looking at this infernal schooner much longer. I wish she'd do something, or give me an opportunity to. I'd like to save the life of a girl with that profile, but she can't very well fall off the sand."

It certainly seemed an unlikely supposition. She was calmness, unconsciousness, personified. Not aggressive unconsciousness, that shows itself in pretty little sudden turns of the head, or twitches of refractory ribbons; there was no archness, no shadow of a blush. She had been interrupted, but she had long ago forgotten what the interruption had been, and she had almost finished another page of her book. Jack was rapidly nearing the point where men adopt strange and reckless expedients, with no thought of dangerous consequences.

"There are but two alternatives left for me to choose from," he said to himself; "no half measures will do. Either I must pick her up and throw her into the water, and then pull her out, or I must walk on up the beach and not look back at her once. I can't bear to do the latter, but the former seems severe, and she would never forgive me if it should turn out to be unbecoming. Good heavens! why doesn't she help us both out?"

Just at this point some papers fluttered out of the girl's book, and a suspicion of a breeze found nothing better to do than to waft them toward the water. Evans sprang forward and picked them up, and for the first time looked the young lady full in the face. A light color touched her cheek as she took the bits of paper from his hand.

"Thank you," said she, with a quiet little smile, and the subdued sunlight shining through her lashes. "I was very stupid to let them go." Then she dropped her eyes on the page again, as if there was nothing more to be said, and he stood and looked at her as if he thought there ought to be, but didn't know what it was. But he was resolved to have no more long silences.

"This can't go on," he said at last—"my standing here, you know, and you not looking at me."

She did look at him then, and caught the smile which made Evans' lady friends so singularly obtuse to his several faults of character; but her eyes were on her book again as she replied, "No, I suppose not."

"Not too encouraging, certainly," thought Evans, grimly; "but perhaps—yes, I think so—just encouraging enough." So he tried again: "The beach is rather deserted."

"I shouldn't call it deserted," said she, slowly, raising her eyes again far enough to glance along its level line. "It is not fair. I should say it was rather—unoccupied."

This was a positive advance. Evans imitated the infernal schooner, and tacked abruptly. "Will you shoot me if I sit down by you?" he asked, glancing at her pistol. He was anxious to be on a level with her, and catch a longer look at her eyes and chin.

She smiled a little. "I never shoot at a shorter distance than ten feet," she said.

"Then," said he, "it would be simple suicide for me to go on. The farther off I should be the greater would be the temptation."

He stood looking wistfully down at her, but she did not reply at first. Then she said, demurely, "You might go the other way."

"I never retrace my steps," said Jack, boldly. "I always fall with my feet to the foe. Don't you believe in it?" he questioned, after a pause, during which he felt rather than saw the encouragement of another little smile.

"It depends a good deal upon my boots," she replied.

Evans was tempted to sit down on the strength of this, but forebore lest he should seem to take advantage of her levity. "That principle seems to me a dangerous one," he said, gravely. "Unswerving fidelity demands that there should be no such exception. Nevertheless I believe in exceptions, don't you?"

"One must; there is nothing else to do. The trouble is that, like the Latin grammar, there are so many exceptions, it seems hardly worth while to learn the rules."

"It might be safer to start without prepossessions, you think! There are too many situations where 'no rules need apply.' I think so, too. May I stay?"

"Yes."

He threw himself on the sand beside her. She closed her book and waited for him to say something.

"You are fond of shooting?" he asked, taking up her pistol.

"I am fond of firing," she said. "I never shot anything yet—anything animate, I mean."

"But you would like to?"

"Oh yes; I should like to."

"I am more and more thankful that a wise dispensation prevented my proceeding into your line of vision."

She laughed. "Oh, I think my principles would have restrained me. I haven't dared shoot all the afternoon; it seems such a shame to wake up anything."

"It is delicious. Is it always so here?"

"I do not know. This my first experience. Mamma has been here before, but without me. I haven't quite decided yet whether I shall be perfectly happy or die of ennui in another week. Which shall it be?"

"Reasoning from sentiment, world manners, and the general beauty of the surroundings, I should say the former; from my previous experience of life, probably the latter. I don't know which is worth the most as ground to stand on."

"Sentiment is always better than experience," she said dreamily, with her eyes fixed on the now distant schooner.

"She has had a disappointment," thought Jack. "No, not a disappointment, a disillusionment. Why?" he asked, dreamily too. It seemed to be her mood, and all his friends said Evans was nothing unless he was sympathetic.

"We are happiest when we are unreasoning, are we not? Experience forces us to reason."

"Man is a reasoning animal," said Jack, sententiously

"Ah," she said, with a laugh, "I am not so sure of that. But falling back on commonplaces is a shabby way to withdraw from a conversation which bade fair to be quite after the order of modern literature," and she turned her gaze full upon him. Her manner was singularly charming. Her eyes were a deep blue, and frank and fearless in their expression to an uncommon degree. Evans felt that they, at least, were suited to the day and place, if her dress was a little too suggestive of an ephemeral existence—of the world too worldly. They were deep and true and calm and shaded, and you felt that you would never tire of them. Here their restfulness was in accordance with circumstances; but how precious would be their charm were circumstances in bitter contrast! They would see faults, but forgive them; they would fill with tears, but never waver. And Jack awoke to the consciousness that he had looked at them quite long enough, and that it was time for him to say something.

"I don't want to talk like modern literature," he said. "I don't want to be modern. I don't want to feel modern. I want to go back a hundred years and make believe this country about here has never been touched by the hand of improvement—that there are not any cities, or telephones, or bicycles on the continent."

"Or horse-cars where you have to put your own fare in the box," she added. She was resting her head on the rock behind her, and watching him with a half smile, nowise disturbed by the unconscious scrutiny with which he had been regarding her. She went on after a moment: "And yet I don't agree with you. I never had a fancy for Indians—that sort of people are so hard to get along with pleasantly. And I think soda biscuits are so unwholesome. Don't you always fancy the early settlers as having soda biscuits for tea? I do."

"They didn't always have tea. If you will persist in examining me on early American history you must pardon the not unnatural pride I take in showing how extensive is my information on such points. They threw it into the Gulf of Mexico."

"I shouldn't suggest any correction if it hadn't to do with Boston; I'm always afraid of not doing just what is right by Boston, especially as regards colonial history. You're sure to feel it afterward."

Evans smiled, and slightly raised his eyebrows. "This is malicious—absolutely malicious. I told you I wanted to forget the progress of modern thought, and you actually drag Boston into the conversation."

"But why don't you want to be modern? I'm modern."

"Yes, you are modern, but not essentially so; I took all that into consideration."

"O, but I am!—essentially so," she persisted. "I dressed up for a Martha Washington tea-party once, and I looked like a fright."

"We don't go to Martha Washington tea parties. We are sitting here on the shore, and that vessel in the distance is the Mayflower going back to England. Now don't be didactic again and attempt to prove to me that if it was the Mayflower we shouldn't be able to see it."

They were both silent a few moments, watching the distant boat as it sailed slowly, slowly out of sight.

"Elevators save you a great deal of trouble," she remarked at length, though, as it might seem, a little irrelevantly. Evans laughed.

"I begin to think that you do hopelessly belong to an effete civilization," he said. "It should be part of our primitive existence that we are fond of toil and trouble, that we are unhappy without it."

"Don't!" said she. "Paradoxes are dangerous. One never knows where one is nor when one is going to stop."

"I always know when I'm going to stop," said Jack sadly; "when you crush me and make it a positive impossibility for me to go on. Your bringing a pistol was a work of supererogation."

"You are so easily crushed!" she laughed. "Your disposition is mercurial—at least I think it is. I have never been sure what a mercurial disposition is."

"I imagine you are right. I certainly am something of a barometer, more easily crushed some days than others. It's humiliating to be at the mercy of the weather."

"I am not the weather," she said; "and it was I whose influence was so depressing. This wealth of similes has confused you."

"If I can forget it don't remind me that I am at your mercy. I'm not sure that you have any. I prefer the weather; the sun has to shine sometimes."

"Yes, fortunately for everybody, since it is for everybody that the sun shines," she added, softly.

"Ah! if the sun only shone for one person, that would be a different thing," he began, eagerly; "and if you——" But the blue eyes came back from their gaze at the horizon, and met the look of growing feeling in his with so cool, so repressive a glance that he dropped the tone of sentiment he had adopted, and, with a half-smile of understanding of his own mistake and her reproof, concluded: "And if you were not sure of being that fortunate person you'd not hint at so dreadful a possibility. There's a pretty piece of seaweed, by the way. Are you at all interested in marine specimens?"

"Not in the least. In fact I particularly dislike them."

"The wind is tempered to the shorn lamb. At least we agree upon one point."

"I like the seas and all that in them is while it is in them, but as soon as anything is taken out and becomes a specimen, it is so sticky and soft and draggly! The least little pinch tells so on it. I tried to pick out seaweeds with a pin at one time, but I have found since that life is too short for such pleasures."

The afternoon was wearing on; the tide had turned, and a little stronger breeze arisen.

"Oh dear," she said, "the sky is clouding over, the air is changing. I begin to feel that possibly—sometime in the future—I might feel active enough to shiver."

"Don't tell me so; please don't tell me so," said Evans, lazily digging holes in the warm, dry sand. "I shall be like the man in Pilgrim's Progress—I shall never look up at the sky if there is a chance of any change. Don't tell me about it."

"You are an ardent lover, an eager follower of change," said the soft voice, quietly. Jack stopped digging, and looked up at the speaker. "Yes," she continued, "you are. You like today because you are tired of yesterday's hurry; you will like tomorrow's travel because you will be tired of today's peacefulness. You like to talk to me because for the last two or three days you have seen nothing but country beauties; next week you will wonder that you ever cared for anything but rosy cheeks and gingham aprons."

"Is it not enough that I have tamely submitted to the charge of a mercurial disposition? Must you also accuse me not only of inconsistency, but of more than doubtful taste? I am by no means a connoisseur in gingham aprons."

"No, but you will be, or else she will teach you how to make rag carpets, or shell Lima beans."

"By Jove!" thought Evans, "I'd like to have her teach me what she pleases, and she'd find I would be in no hurry for a change of employment, either. Do they always give you lessons in something?" he asked, abruptly. "What are you teaching me now?"

"I?"—and she laughed—"I am teaching you to forget—the last one."

"No," said he, in a low voice, with his eyes on hers, "you are teaching me to remember."

"Ah no!" and she shook her head, as she glanced out over the sea, which was rousing itself from its slumber. "That is dangerous work sometimes. I would not try my 'prentice hand at that."

There was a moment's pause and an advancing wave gathered, rose, curled, and broke.

"I would like to teach you," he said earnestly, but without looking at her, "but it would be useless to try. It would indeed need a master hand."

"You could teach me easily to remember some things," she said slowly.

He glanced up at her quickly. "Yes, I am afraid so," he said, with a smile. "I shall be very careful."

"Will tomorrow be like today, I wonder?"

"Of course it will not," he answered, impatient at fate, not her. "When was tomorrow ever like today?"

"In the garden of Eden."

"Yes, and will people never learn from that old story that any change is always for the worse?"

"Even from stormy to sunny weather, I suppose, O apostle of peaceful monotony and unchanging calm. You are making universal what is only occasional."

"Perhaps. Certainly I would make an eternity of what is, alas! but one day.—I am certainly very far gone indeed," he said to himself, "if I have begun to talk about eternities, but heaven knows I meant it."

"Time is measured by comparison. Parenthetically let me remark that I think I must have read that somewhere. How many days seem eternities!"

"All those days which are spent on the shore in a hazy atmosphere, with the waves and the wind half asleep."

"And those you would make everlasting! And we would get the neuralgia in the backs of our necks, and the crimp would come out of my hair, and we would both have colds in our heads—an eternity of cold in the head! Can't you propose something pleasanter?"

"I've a good mind to propose in earnest," thought Evans; "but it borders on the ridiculous to ask a woman to marry you before you know her name. You would have to call her something, and 'Ma'am' seems stilted, while 'Say' only serves on occasions."

"I can propose that you let me put that shawl over your shoulders," he said aloud. "Since we can't have the one, we will at least not run the risk of the other."

"If the time has come to put on wraps, the time has come to go," she said wistfully. "The charm of the day is broken. I almost feel as if it might rain, and if this quiet is once disturbed, who knows if it will stop short of thunder? Those clouds look a little like it. Do you see that sail-boat is almost here? I am glad it will be safe from the storm."

"You have been much interested in watching that sail-boat," he said, petulantly. He was jealous of its interference.

"Yes, I am hard hit," he said to himself as he became conscious of this. "I wish the boat would go to the bottom if she's going to look at it that way. There's more life in her eyes now than there has been before today. She shall not go. I will not let her until she tells me who she is, and that I may see her again, and then—I will not let her go at all."

She had not answered his last words, but was anxiously watching the boat, which rocked almost perilously on the heavy waves.

"Very much interested," he added, more petulantly still.

"Yes," she said, simply, "I think I will go to the dock to meet it," and she rose.

"And you ask if tomorrow will be like today almost as if your heart was in it, you hint that it is I who love variety, and you hasten to meet—who knows but to welcome—an element of change!"

He had risen too, and was looking down at her with a world of reproach in his eyes. She did not look up, she did not speak. For the first time that afternoon there was a touch of consciousness in her manner. A wave broke almost at their feet; the breeze blew salt in their faces; she drew her cloak closer about her, and turned with a little smile in the direction of the dock.

"I suppose you do not wish me to go with you. I do not wish to go with you; I will not. There may be strangers. It is like a fashionable seaside resort; it is abominable."

"I would like to have you come with me. There cannot be many strangers, and there is one friend, I am sure."

"I should not care to see my own friends now; you cannot expect me to care to see yours."

She walked on. "Come," she said; and he followed her. "You will like to see this one, I am sure. It is Tom Owens."

"Tom Owens!" He stopped so suddenly that she stopped also. "Tom Owens! And you knew that he was coming?"

The long lashes were raised, and the frankness of the eyes was indisputable. "I knew he was coming—yes." There was a question in his look which she answered: "He is my husband."

Evans walked on by her side, confining his first observation to his own inner consciousness. "So you are the girl Tom Owens married?" he said, pulling his mustache.

"I am the girl Tom Owens married. And you—you are Jack Evans, his college chum and his best friend."

"Well, Mrs. Owens," said Jack, as he shook hands late that evening, "I am off in the morning—so good-by. The last time I saw Tom in California I wished him good luck, and I begin to think my blessing is worth something after all. I shall not be so reckless of it in future. Think of me tomorrow evening with the rag carpet or the Lima beans. Good-night."

QUIPS.

"Yes," said the country telegraph operator, "some people don't seem to have any sense. A dispatch arrived last week for a man around the corner, and the darned fool hasn't come for it yet."

When Henry James was writing his "Portrait of a Lady" his publishers wondered whether the story would ever end. Finally the editor of the Atlantic wrote him to this effect: "Is your story really a portrait or a panorama?"

A Scottish laird surprised his friends at dinner by affirming that the finest grapes he had ever eaten were grown in the open air in Fifeshire. Their surprise was moderated, however, when he returned to the subject and added, "But I maun premise that I prefer them soor."

It was in the time of Cromwell, we believe, that an illiterate soldier contrived to spell the word "usage" without using a single letter properly belonging to it. He wrote it "yowzitch," and when told that the spelling was incorrect, declared that nobody could spell with a quill pen.

The Philadelphia Press announces a singular discovery. It is that the use of garlic conduces to a hallucination of the brain on the part of the indulger that he is possessed of valuable secrets, which it is his conscientious duty to impart to others by putting his mouth close to the ears of his victim.

"Well," observed a 14-year-old boy, knocking the ashes off his cigaret and throwing down a printed catalog of "A valuable private library to be sold at public sale"—"well, he must have been a dry old stick. Five thousand books in his library and not a single dime novel about Injuns or pirats among 'em!"

Into the child's sick-room walks a friend of the family, and, going up to the bedside of the convalescent, says: "Glad to see you are so much better, Minnie." "Thanks!" returns Minnie. "I shall be out in a few days." "And how long is it since you began to get well?" "About a week or ten days ago," answered the child—"ever since our doctor was drowned."

[Henry Poujol, in New York Sun.]—After many peregrinations I once fell into the hands of a village barber. Only a few days after I had changed masters I saw entering the shop a poor devil with a piteous air, who politely asked if they would be so generous as to shave him for the love of God, for, he said, he found himself without a penny. The rustic barber was charitable enough to consent, and invited him to sit in the arm-chair. Nevertheless, when he saw the bristling chin of this unlucky fellow he judged it proper not to make use of his best instrument. Some little time after the operation was begun a great caterwauling was heard from the back shop. These cries became so persistent that the barber finally remarked: "What in the world can they be doing to the cat to make it cry like that?" The unfortunate customer, his eyes filled with tears, replied with a deep sigh: "Perhaps it is a cat that they are shaving for the love of God." This pathetic response completely softened the heart of the hairdresser, and he took a sharper razor to finish the shaving.

THE LAFAYETTE LIBEL SUIT.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., May 5.—[Special.]—Most of today was occupied in hearing the argument of Mandler's attorneys for a new trial in the Gougar-Mandler case. At the close of argument Judge Gould overruled the motion for a new trial. He overruled motion for arrest in judgment, pronounced judgment on the verdict, and granted an appeal to the Supreme Court, the defendant being given 180 days in which to file bills of exceptions.

"PUT ASUNDER."

Judges Tuley and Moran Undo a Number of Marital Knots.

He Did Not Respect His Mother-in-Law and Was Deprived of His Wife.

The applicants for divorce yesterday were very numerous, but their stories had more of a similarity than usual, the greater part of them alleging cruelty as the ground for separation. Among the cases heard by Judge Tuley was that of Mary B. Wright, a woman of 35, or thereabouts. She was married to Walter Wright in December, 1881, at Providence, and after they had lived off her mother a few months she mildly suggested that he ought to do something for a living. He retorted in a very abusive way, and his mother-in-law accused him of drinking, and she too received abuse and blows. On divers other occasions, also, she had been beaten for asking for money. Complainant's mother said when Wright was not cruel he was almost as bad in another way, by being disgustingly sweet on his wife. The Judge said that he would grant a decree.

The Outcome of a Saloonkeeper's Drunken Adventures.

The first case heard by Judge Moran was that of Mattie Morrison against Albert Morrison, the charge being adultery and desertion. They were married in 1866, and lived for a number of years in Toledo, coming to Chicago about six years ago. When they first came here Morrison went into the saloon business, but he got tired of that in about three months and went into railroading. He was in the habit of being out at night, and she saw circumstances which led her to believe he was unfaithful. One morning she overheard a conversation between him and his bartender, in which they told of a fine time they had had the previous evening. Frank Crosby the bartender, was next called, and he told a very frank story of his own shame. He had been out on a drinking spree a number of times with Morrison. On one occasion Morrison received a considerable sum, and in accordance with a previous promise they went out on a spree. The next morning witness and Morrison indulged in some reminiscences over the gay time they had had, which was overheard by Mrs. Morrison. Witness acknowledged he was a married man when he went on this spree, but claims to be a widower now. A decree of divorce was granted.

The next case was that of George H. Flint. While he was a brakeman on the Fort Wayne Road in 1878 he became acquainted with Annie McDonald, a woman who had been divorced from her husband. She was accustomed to ride on his train, and as he gallantly helped her off the car he plucked up courage enough to overcome the constitutional diffidence of railroad men, especially brakemen, and spoke to her. Finally by agreement he went to St. Louis and opened a small fancy store. She went on there in May, 1879, and they were married. But she developed certain traits of character which were at variance with his peace-loving disposition. He testified that she struck him repeatedly, at one time knocking out a front tooth, and on one occasion attacked him with a hatchet. They had frequent quarrels, she being very jealous of him, and at the end of one of them he took his hat and came away, with only 15 cents in his pocket, leaving her with all the stock and store, and had never seen or heard of her since. She had told him she was going with other men, but he told her he would not leave her on that account if she would only treat him well. He had been married before, but had been divorced. The Judge said when a husband sought a divorce on the ground of extreme and repeated cruelty he must show something more than a woman. This was a very strange case of repeated cruelty, and Flint must have had a very extraordinary notion of the relations of husband and wife. He was undoubtedly a sober, industrious man, but that did not help him, and he had not shown sufficient cause for a decree.

Miscellaneous Instances.

Florence Flanagan wed with James P. Flanagan, and found it quite too much. He was a gambler and trader, and was accustomed to give her a beating when she wanted money. On one occasion he tried to kill her by the Othello method, and at another time threw her down-stairs. After she left him, a year ago, he met her in the street and struck her because she would not go back to him.

Mary Hertges, a rosy-faced Teuton, told a pitiful tale of the cruelty she had received from George W. Hertges, who amused his spare time in kicking her out of bed, refused to care for her when she was sick in bed, abused her until she had a miscarriage, and also treated her with unnatural and nameless cruelty so that she left him. Since then she has earned her own living, and is now clerk in the Paris glove store. Judge Tuley granted a decree.

Mary Cheek testified that she had married Owen T. Cheek twice, and had finally and fully determined she could not live with him. The first marriage was in 1862, and she lived with him until 1881, when she obtained a divorce on the ground of drunkenness. But shortly afterward he blossomed out actively as a temperance worker, and at her son's request and for his sake she married him again. A month after that he got drunk, was arrested, and came home in company of an officer to have her pay his fine. From that time on he lived on the town, sweeping out saloons and doing odd jobs, until just after the bill was filed, when he left the city to avoid service of process. His son, a young man of 20 years of age, was the principal witness against the father, and on the strength of certain criminatory admissions made by the father to the son a decree of divorce on the ground of desertion was granted by Judge Tuley.

Mary McCallen proved up a good case apparently against her husband, Michael McCallen, on the ground of five years' desertion, but she spoiled it all again by admitting her husband had within the last two years returned to her for a short time, and that they had resumed marital relations. Her solicitor tried ineffectually to prove this made no difference, but the Judge held otherwise, and Mrs. McCallen went away disconsolate.

Louis Gaertner was another unsuccessful applicant to the same Judge. He frankly admitted he wanted a divorce so as to marry again. His wife had been left in Germany when he came here some years ago to grow rich, and had refused to follow him when he sent for her, and he had found a blue-eyed German maiden who was willing to become Mrs. Gaertner just as soon as No. 1 was out of the way. The evidence showed Gaertner knew fifteen months ago that his wife was in Frankfurt, and he must show more satisfactorily that he could not find her before he was entitled to a decree. The case was accordingly continued to enable a copy of the bill to be sent to Germany to Mrs. Gaertner.

Mrs. Catherine Lutz showed that she had a husband, John Lutz, a tailor, who earned $25 a week, but refused to support her. She finally told him he could not board with her unless he paid his board, and he left her about 1877, and she had not seen him since, though he was living in the city now. She was granted her decree by Judge Moran.

Harriet T. Jones also obtained a decree before Judge Moran against William Jones on proving that her husband had another wife living when he married her in June, 1876. The former wife left him because she did not like to keep house for a laboring man, and went back to England.

THE OAR.

The Catlin Club, of this city, has made application for membership in the Mississippi Valley Amateur Association.

Jacob Gaudaur, the Canadian oarsman, has returned from Creve Cœur, Mo., for the single-scull race at Pullman.

Harvard's chances for winning the college race this year are said to be seriously impaired by the retirement of Curtis, the stroke oar of the university crew. Some weeks ago he strained a ligament in his right leg, and the doctors say he will be unable to row for months to come.

The backers of Hamm and Conley, the Halifax scullers, are anxious to match them in a double-scull race with any two rowers in the world.

Trickett, Laycock, and Largan, of England, have determined to visit America this summer, and may be looked for in July. They expect matches with several American scullers.

Ross has accepted the amended articles of agreement forwarded to him by Hanlan for the race at Ogdensburg July 18. The race will be four miles, with a turn, for $1,000 a side and the championship of the world.

BASE-BALL.

Opening of the League Season in Chicago.

Over 5,000 people sat in the chilly atmosphere of the Ball Park yesterday afternoon to witness the opening game of the league season in this city. A great many of them must have been disappointed, not because the home club lost the game, but because of the wretched display they made against the Detroits—a club whom they had beaten three games straight. The Chicagos came on the field in their red and white uniforms, and after some preliminary practice by both clubs the band struck up a lively air, while Capt. Anson ran up the champion flag of 1882.

The Chicagos lost the toss, and, on coming to bat, Dalrymple, Kelly, and Williamson went out in order, Capt. Quest assisting in the first two put-outs. The first ball hit by Wood was fumbled by Pfeffer. A single by Powell and an error by Williamson of Farrell's hit allowed Wood to score. In the second inning Burns hit for two bases, and his run was earned by Flint sending it "over the garden wall" for a couple of bags. In the second inning Detroit got another run, which was due to Corcoran's failing to hold a thrown ball from Goldsmith, allowing Mansell to tally. No runs were made by either side in the third. In the fourth Burns got in another two-baser, and on Flint's single tallied another earned run. The run-getting on either side stopped for a time, with an occasional hit, and an error here and there by the Chicagos. In the seventh inning Weidman pitched three men out in succession, and in the ninth two men struck the pale air instead of the ball. The game stood 2 to 2 when the Chicagos ended their half of the inning, and when two of the Detroits went out it looked as if it would take more than nine innings to decide it. The third striker, Weidman, was spared, however, Dalrymple muffing his fly. Wood then hit for a base, and was followed by Hanlon with a two-baser, on which Weidman came in with the winning run. The victors were loudly applauded, for the game was won on its merits. The Chicagos evidently did not have on their batting clothes, and will probably try their white suits in the game tomorrow. Williamson made a couple of bad errors, and Corcoran was off in his pitching, allowing two men to go to bases on balls. Flint's excellent catching saved some wild pitches. The only Chicago players who were able to find the ball when pitched by Weidman were Burns, Flint, and Williamson. The others either struck out or batted easy grounders. Weidman bothered the best batters badly. The fielding of the Detroits was nearly perfect—a passed grounder by Powell being the only error. Mr. Lane, the umpire, gave the best of satisfaction. His voice is somewhat hoarse from a cold contracted in New York, but he did his best to make his decisions understood by the audience.

Other Games Yesterday in Which League Clubs Participated.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 5.—[Special.]—The weather today was uncomfortably cold, and on that account the game lost most of its interest to the 2,000 men and boys in attendance. The only redeeming features of the contest were streaks of batting in the third inning by the visitors, and in the fifth inning when the Bisons recovered the lead. For the Clevelands York led at the bat, and in the second inning made a magnificent hit over the left-field fence, scoring a home-run. In the first the Buffalos scored three runs on Foley's single, Shaffer's base on balls, Brouthers' single, Bushong's overthrow to second, and a single by Richardson. In the fifth, with the visitors leading, Galvin made a hit after two men were out. Foley and O'Rourke followed with doubles, which, with Bushong's passed ball and Bradley's fumble, let in three runs. In the eighth, singles by Brouthers and Richardson, and two errors by McCormick, let in two runs. Outside of the home run the visitors scored three in the third on singles by Bushong and Hotaling, and doubles by Dunlap and York alternating. Following is

NEW YORK, May 5.—[Special.]—The Providence Club again defeated the New York nine here today. By earning a run in the first inning the home club took the lead and maintained it until the seventh, when an error of Ewing placed the Rhode Island players on even terms with the New-Yorks. In the eighth inning errors by Ewing and Hankinson gave the visitors two runs, which won the game.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 5.—[Special.]—Ferguson's muff of a hard fly-catch gave the Bostons the game today. The score stood 3 to 3 at the end of the eighth inning, when rain began to fall. Play was continued, and the Bostons scored two runs off base-hits by Sutton and Burdock and Ferguson's muff. The ball was well out in the field and really belonged to the centre-fielder, but Lewis was warned back. Morrill pitched for the Bostons and Coleman for the Philadelphias.

The Championship Record.

As will be seen by the championship table annexed, the club first to lead in the number of games won is Providence, followed by Chicago and New York. Philadelphia is the only club that has not thus far won a game. The coming week will no doubt see changes in the positions of the clubs:

Goldsmith will pitch in tomorrow's Detroit-Chicago game, and Gore will play centre-field.

Over 12,000 people witnessed the first game between the Bostons and New Yorks on the Polo grounds.

The New Yorks beat the Metropolitans seven games out of eight. The clubs will not play again together before October.

Depangler, the Californian, who was engaged by the Detroits, has been released, and has signed with the Saginaws as catcher.

The six games between the Athletic and Philadelphia Clubs were witnessed by 45,000 people. This is said to be the official count.

Rumor has it that Bradley, one of the pitchers of the Cleveland Club, wants to be released, so that he can play with the Alleghenys. The position of Captain of the latter club has been offered him.

The attendance at the opening game in Cincinnati between the St. Louis and Cincinnati Clubs was nearly as large as that witnessing the play of "Julius Cæsar" at the Dramatic Festival the evening previous.

The red-breeched and red-capped Chicagos appeared rather oddly to the audience yesterday, so accustomed had the latter become to white suits. Some admired the new togs, while others said they much preferred the old.

At the close of the game yesterday some of the boys on the seats to the left of the grand stand indulged in a cushion-carrom game. They flung the cushions at one another, and every policeman that dared to show his head was pelted right and left. The audience enjoyed the performances, after the spiritless display on the ball field.

THE COURTS.

An Omaha Lawyer Gets a Heavy Verdict.

The jury in the case of William J. Connell, the Omaha lawyer, against the Pennsylvania Company returned a verdict before Judge Gary fixing the damages at $15,000. Connell, on the 7th of December last, bought a ticket from Omaha to New York over the Wabash, Baltimore & Ohio and Pennsylvania Roads, and went by Washington as far as Philadelphia. When he started from there for New York, however, the Pennsylvania Company refused to honor the coupon and Connell was ejected from the train at Tacony, and was considerably injured. The defendant claimed it had notified the Wabash Company on the 10th of December that it would not recognize any of the latter's coupons after Dec. 10. It was shown, however, that the company received its proportion of the amount paid by Connell for his ticket. On a former trial Connell got a verdict for $15,000, and now on the second trial he is awarded the same sum.

Items.

Judge Blodgett was engaged in hearing the case of Robert Morrison, of Liverpool, Eng., against Frederick R. Otis and Charles T. Otis, and another by Laselles & Merry, of London, to recover about $5,500. Some years ago the defendants shipped to plaintiffs a quantity of cheese, but it was defective in quality, and suits were brought against defendants in England and judgment recovered against them.

Judge Rogers set aside the verdict in the libel suit of J. E. Cleary, editor of the Mail Car, against the proprietors of the Herald to recover damages for publishing an article reflecting on plaintiff's character. The verdict was $4,600, but the plaintiff remitted $2,000, and still the Judge thought it too large and granted a new trial.

James A. Jackson and others began a suit in the Circuit Court against Handy, Richardson & Co., claiming $10,000.

The jury in the case of Sarah E. McDonald against the West Division Railway Company returned a verdict in favor of the defendant in Judge Anthony's court-room. This was a suit to recover $20,000 for alleged damages by being thrown from a car at the corner of Madison and Peoria streets in January last.

The Difficulty Between the Inspectors and Measurers Amicably Adjusted—The "Scabs" Join the Union.

The Inspectors and Measurers Sign the Agreement.

The difficulty between the journeymen inspectors and measurers and Lumberman's Exchange was amicably adjusted yesterday. It seems that the principal objection to the requirements made by the exchange was that the union men were opposed to working with the "scabs," and as the latter signified their willingness to become members of the union they were taken in. Yesterday afternoon the union men marched in a body to the office of the Secretary of the Lumberman's Exchange and signed the agreement that they would work for any Chief Inspector desiring their services, and with any duly licensed inspector or measurer. In return each was given a temporary permit, and will receive his permanent license June 1. The Chief Inspectors say that they are well pleased with the result, as there is plenty of work on hand. It is also stated that a number of workmen from other cities have applied to the exchange for employment in response to the advertisement inserted in the papers several days ago, and that several of them have been engaged. In this case there will still be "scabs" to work with, unless the union persuades them to join.

The propeller Saginaw Valley, of the new Chicago & Ogdensburg Line, made her first trip to this port yesterday. She is almost a new boat, having been built but a little over a year, and is well appointed. She is under the command of Capt. A. Keith, with William W. Baird as clerk. She left for Ogdensburg last night.

The 'longshoremen heve not met with very good success so far in their attempt to get 40 cents an hour at Alpena. At present there is hardly any demand for labor, as but few vessels are loading, and most of those in port will not attempt to load for at least a week. Thirty and 35 cents per hour was paid for a few non-union men for two loads.

William Ellis, Superintendent of the Welland Canal, has instructed the collector of canal tolls at Port Dalhousie that, until navigation is again opened through lock No. 2 of the old Welland Canal, now being rebuilt, no extra charge for canal tolls will be made upon vessels that are compelled to go round via Allanburg in order to reach St. Catharines from Lake Ontario.

AMHERSTBURG, Ont., May 5.—[Special.]—There was quite a gale on Lake Erie yesterday afternoon and last night. The City of Dresden, from Peleo Island, reports the schooner Corsican, loaded with 350 tons of coal for Mullen, of Amherstburg, ashore on Mill Point, Pelee Island, and will probably go to pieces. Another schooner, about the size of the Corsican, is ashore at Lizzard Point, flying a signal of distress. The Captain of the Dresden learned that the vessel's boat had washed ashore and the islanders had dug the sand out and rescued the crew. The name of the schooner was not learned. The Colin Campbell, together with the schooner Sherwood, both coal laden, which went on Shickluna Reef yesterday, are still there, the Sherwood having filled and sunk. The Campbell is so far out that the sea has no effect on her. The tugs Kate Williams and Gladiator, which were sent to their relief, were unable, on account of heavy weather, to work. The Williams returned to Detroit for pumps today, with the Captain of the Sherwood. The E. Fitzgerald is ashore on Point Pelee mainland. The tug Oswego left here last night to go to her relief. The tug Kate Williams came up from the Gordon Campbell today and got two steam-pumps with which to pump out the schooner Annie Sherwood, which is on a reef beside the Campbell, and full of water. The work of lightering the Campbell was commenced today, and there is a good prospect of her being saved. The schooner Lafrinier, bound from Detroit to Buffalo with wheat, is reported ashore at Point Au Pelee. Her cargo was insured here for $26,000, the rate being 10 cents per $100.

Slamm; Second-Lieutenant, Edmund Burke; Chief Engineer, John A. Collins.

PORT COLBORNE, Ont., May 5.—[Special.]—The schooners W. H. Rounds and Belle Hanscom, bound from Detroit to Oswego with wheat, and the propeller Nashua, from Toledo to Ogdensburg with a general cargo, passed down today. These are the first craft to enter the canal this spring. A fleet of vessels bound up are lying at Port Dalhousie. They will not commence to lock up there until Monday on account of some defect in one of the locks.

MARQUETTE, Mich., May 5.—[Special.]—The propeller Osceola, commanded by Capt. William Cummings, arrived from Duluth this morning. She has 10,000 bushels of grain from Duluth, and 350 tons of copper from Houghton. The Captain reports very little difficulty with the ice.

IDENTIFIED.

The Two Men Charged with the McMahon Murder Recognized by the Witnesses of the Deed.

The energies of the detective department are at present directed toward making a case against Cavanaugh and Scanlan, the supposed murderers of John McMahon. This murder was committed about 4 o'clock on the morning of Aug. 3, 1880, McMahon's saloon at the corner of Thirty-ninth and Laurel streets being entered through a side window by a burglar, whose partner stood outside on guard. McMahon was awakened by some unusual sound made by the intruder, and upon arising and grappling with him was shot dead. Both burglars escaped, and the case was for a long time surrounded by the deepest mystery. Finally, Detectives McDonald and Duffy, of the armory, arrested a young man named O'Neil, who answered somewhat the description of the man who fired the shot that killed McMahon, and made every effort to convict him of the crime, and it is said that Detective McDonald to this day believes O'Neil to have been guilty. More thoughtful officers, however, have become convinced that Scanlan and Cavanaugh are the men, Scanlan being the one who killed the saloonkeeper, while Cavanaugh is the one who stood on guard outside. Both men were wanted by the police at that time and were keeping out of the way. Cavanaugh only a little while before had shot Officer McCarthy, of the Twelfth Street Station, and Scanlan had escaped from the jail at Geneva, Ill., where he was being held for burglary. Both were hard up for money, and McMahon, as Treasurer of some Irish organization, was supposed to have considerable cash about his place.

At the time of the murder a man named Donnegan, who lived next door to McMahon on Laurel street, went out to the front of the building, where he was confronted by a man with a revolver, who ordered him back to his room, and he went. Of all the prisoners held by the police during the few days following the murder not one was identified by Mr. Donnegan as the fellow who drove him back when he grew too curious. For this reason the police were immensely interested to know if he would identify either Scanlan or Cavanaugh.

Yesterday Detectives Halloran and Costello accompanied Mrs. McMahon and Mr. Donnegan to the County Jail. Cavanaugh was made to join a crowd of five or six prisoners, and then Mr. Donnegan was asked if he recognized his man among them. The suspense of the officers was of very short duration, for with scarcely any hesitancy Mr. Donnegan singled out Cavanaugh and said: "That's the man who drove me back into the house." Cavanaugh never changed countenance, and remained perfectly indifferent to the surroundings. Then Mrs. McMahon was allowed to see Scanlan.

"I don't want to swear any man's life away," she said, "but that is the man who came into our room and killed my husband." Scanlan, the officers say, trembled and paled at this positive statement, but showed no further weakness.

Last evening Cavanaugh was taken to the Central Station and pumped by the detectives. They say he is one of the slickest talkers they know, but they finally caught him in several contradictory statements and he acknowledged to Lieut. Shea that he shot Officer McCarthy. As he had done this once before it was nothing new, but the officers look upon it as a scheme to get a sentence for the assault and so remain away until the witnesses in the McMahon murder die or the case is dropped. He also tried to make the officers believe that he slept with a notorious thief named "Gully" Burns the night of the murder, and says he can prove a satisfactory alibi. The police, however, have evidence that he was up all the night of the murder, and know where the men bought a bottle of whisky only a short time before the murder was committed. In fact, they say they have got the men "dead to rights," though it will be a very hard matter to prove the case on them.

These two men are also the fellows who just before the McMahon murder called a saloonkeeper named Miller to his door on Archer avenue, and when he refused to let them in one of them shot him through the head, killing him instantly. They then ran away and made their escape from the city. As there were no witnesses to that murder it is not likely, or even possible, that it could be proven against them, unless one should "squeal" on his companion.

TRADE AND LABOR.

The Iron Interests.

JOLIET, Ill., May 5.—[Special.]—No. 2 blast-furnace at the Joliet Steel-Works was blown in tonight and both the great furnaces are now in full operation. The converting and rail mill department closed down today, and the rumor became current that they had permanently shut down. Notices were posted in the works that they would probably be shut down all next week, but if the management were ready to start sooner the men would be notified through the daily papers. The cause of the stoppage is the breaking of the centre-pit crane in the converter and the need of repairs on one of the great engines in the rail-mills. The vessels also will be relined and the foundations for the rolls repaired. The prospect for a long run is good.

READING, Pa., May 5.—The Philadelphia & Reading Rolling-Mill shut down today for one week on account of depression in trade and lack of orders.

The puddlers at the Reading Iron-Works, who had asked an advance in wages from $3.50 to $3.75 per ton and were refused, have now offered to return to work at the old rate if paid semi-monthly. The company holds the matter under advisement. A new schedule of wages is announced at McIlvain's rolling-mill. It reduces the pay of puddlers 15 to 20 cents per ton and helpers three cents per ton.

EASTON, Pa., May 5.—The employés of the Glendon Iron Company were notified that wages may be 10 or 15 per cent less than in April. Five furnaces are in blast.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 5.—It is stated that the few remaining union men of the old force employed at the Vulcan steel works in South St. Louis prior to the strike inaugurated there some months ago, have dissolved their union. The action is said to have been unanimous, and if it is ratified by the District Vice-President, as it must be under the rule of the Amalgamated Association to be effective, the men will be free to accept work at the Vulcan, which is a non-union mill.

District Vice-President White today ratified the action of the men and the four lodges of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers which have heretofore existed in South St. Louis are dissolved. Of the nearly 1,000 men who were employed in the Vulcan mill prior to the strike only about 200 remained, not enough really to keep up the lodges. The rest scattered to different parts of the country or went into some other kind of business. Those now here will probably apply to the Vulcan mill for work, and being no longer union men the skilled workmen among them will in all likelihood obtain employment.

The Cigarmakers Present Their Ultimatum.

The cigarmakers' strike begins tomorrow morning. All the cigar manufacturers of the city were presented with the union price-list for work yesterday, and informed that unless the list prices were granted no union man would go to work on Monday morning. The manufacturers have not decided what they will do, and several of them who were spoken to yesterday said that Monday would be time enough to talk on the subject. As the matter stands, while a few of the manufacturers are willing to grant an increase of wages for certain classes of work, they say that they will not and cannot concede to all the demands of the union. A mass-meeting of the cigarmakers, union and non-union, will be held in Greenebaum's Hall at 2 p. m. today. Klare's Hall on North Clark street will be their headquarters during the strike.

The Bricklayers' Trouble Nearing an End.

The bricklayers' strike will probably be terminated on Monday. At least such is the opinion of representatives of the Bricklayers' Union and Master Masons' Association who were asked to express their views on the questions yesterday. The architects, tiring of waiting for a settlement of difficulties between the bricklayers and builders, interested themselves in the matter, and, it is claimed by the bricklayers, have brought about arrangements for a conference between committees representing both sides Monday morning. Contrary to their general custom, prominent members of the Bricklayers' Union were very reticent in talking to reporters yesterday, claiming that they did not wish to say anything that would in the least injure the prospects of an amicable adjustment of their differences. The master masons and builders also declined to talk on the subject. Mr. Prussing, however, said that it would be safe to state that all things would be "lovely" between the bricklayers and bosses at or before 9 o'clock Monday morning. The two committees will be composed of ten members from each society.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., May 5.—[Special]—Following the suits for $30,000 brought by three compositors on the Times against the Democrat for publishing a card of the Typographical Union denouncing that a "rat" and unfair office, Ochs, proprietor of the Times, caused the arrest of Joseph J. Hobby, President; C. F. Rollston, Financial Secretary; and four other printers on the charge of malicious libel. The matter was referred to a compromise committee, who prepared a statement for publication in tomorrow's papers, on which Ochs agreed to pay all costs of the suit, and the printers were released.

Business Embarrassments at Various Places.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 5.—Thomas Farthing, of the firm of G. & T. Farthing, denies that his firm is embarrassed, as is reported from Boston. Some creditors state the firm is embarrassed, while Sherman, Bros. & Co. acknowledge some paper to have been protested, which Farthing and they exchanged. Guither, of Gillette & Sons, says: "Those interested know of the complications, and the books are in the hands of an expert. It is thought matters will be satisfactorily adjusted."

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., May 5.—At an adjourned meeting of the creditors of Williston, Knight & Co. today H. G. Knight agreed to undertake to meet the propositions of the creditors made last week to pay 35 cents on the liabilities of the New York firm, 60 cents on those of the East Hampton corporation, and 40 on the personal liabilities, payment to be made in five parts—two-fifths in cash June 15, one-fifth in cash July 15, one in notes payable Dec. 15, and the balance in notes payable June 15, 1884, the notes to be secured by a mortgage on the East Hampton property. This settlement is understood to depend on Gov. Knight being able to carry out his plans for continuing business at East Hampton. Insolvency proceedings will be stayed two weeks to see whether he can dispose of 1,500 shares for the East Hampton Company at a par value of $100.

PITTSBURG, Pa., May 5.—[Special.]—The latest sensation in the business world hereabouts is the embarrassment of A. D. Tintsman & Co., the well-known coke operators, whose principal works are in Fayette County. It is said on what seems good authority that they will be compelled to make an assignment Monday. Some time ago Mr. Tintsman and Mr. Charles C. Carroll purchased the coke property and works from Mr. Hoggsett, of Uniontown, the property being near that place. The price paid was about $80,000. Mr. Tintsman put about $50,000 into improvements on the works, enlarging the plant, increasing the number of ovens, etc. This took all the ready cash of the firm. Soon after this transaction the coke trade became very dull and the firm commenced to fall behind in the matter of payment. They have considerable paper in various banks in this city and also in Fayette County. The embarrassment of the firm culminated in a judgment, which was obtained by a Pittsburg bank in Uniontown yesterday on a judgment note for $20,000. The note was given to cover other notes, some of which are not secured otherwise, and is for a much larger amount than the actual claim of the bank. Its claim will not exceed $13,000, and part of the paper held by it is indorsed by perfectly responsible parties. The amount of the assets is not known, but it is said they will not reach over $100,000, while the liabilities will exceed that figure. Mr. Tintsman said this evening he would make every effort to pull through, but he could not tell what the result will be. The firm have been large shippers to the West.

NEW YORK, May 5.—[Special.]—Louis Rosenstein & Co., of Nos. 317 and 319 Greenwich street, general grocers and importers of groceries and dried fruits, principally from Germany, made an assignment today, and gave preferences for $128,708. A member of the firm said that the liabilities were about $300,000, but that he could give no estimate of the assets. The failure was due to shrinkage of values and bad debts. Business in the fruit line has been very dull for some time, and almost demoralized since the failure of Wiley, Wickes & Wing a few weeks ago. The greater part of the liabilities of the firm is held in this country. The attorneys of the firm placed the liabilities at about $250,000 and the assets at about $175,000.

SEARCHING FOR WILLIE.

A Case Which Has Many Features of the Charlie Ross Abduction.

FLORENCE, Wis., May 5.—[Special.]—A new and important clew has been discovered concerning the whereabouts of the missing boy Willie Dickinson, the child abducted from this place in November, 1881. Owing to the distance of Florence from large cities and from metropolitan journals comparatively little has been said in the papers of the country concerning Willie Dickinson, though in many points it rivals in interest the Charlie Ross case. Over a year ago mention was made in the Washington dispatches of THE TRIBUNE of the search in Virginia for the missing boy, but since that time the case has disappeared from public notice. The stolen boy is 6 years old, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Dickinson, of this place, and grandson of Congressman Hubbell, of Michigan, Mrs. Dickinson being Mr. Hubbell's daughter.

Mr. Dickinson had some trouble with the rougher element of this town, who swore that they would eventually be revenged upon him. But he paid no attention to their threats. About the 1st of November, 1881, his son Willie suddenly disappeared, and up to the present time has not been seen by any of the family.

A MOTHER'S GRIEF.

Mrs. Dickinson became almost crazed over the loss of her boy. She determined to make an effort and undertake the search in person. A notorious character named William Morris was last seen in company with the child, and as he did not return to the town for some time the supposition was that he was the abductor. Mrs. Dickinson began a prolonged pursuit that led across the United States following her child from one place to another, and at times being only a few hours behind the fugitives, it was thought. She went to Culpeper, Va., and found that the party she was after had left the day before she arrived.

WHAT A MONOGRAM REVEALED.

Upon going to the house where they stopped a garment upon which Mrs. Dickinson had worked the monogram of her little boy was found. She also learned that they had purchased tickets for Washington. She at once went to that city, stopping at Mr. Hubbell's residence. Upon investigation it was found that the persons had left the train at Branch Station, a small place six miles from Culpeper, and to guard against their future escape nearly every postal agent was supplied with a description of Morris, together with his photograph, in the hope of having him collared at once. The search on Mrs. Dickinson's part was finally discontinued, but active inquiries have been kept up. The new clew comes from Dakota, the information being to the effect that the party who stole the boy has been in Fargo with the child lately. Immediate and thorough steps will be taken to work the clew.

RAILROADS.

East-Bound Freight Shipments in Excess of Those of the Previous Week.

The New Dining-Car System of the Michigan Central Formally Inaugurated.

Slight Increase in East-Bound Freight Shipments—Another Reduction in East-Bound Rates Likely to Be Made Soon.

East-bound freight business from this city improved somewhat during the last week, but the increase in shipments is not sufficient to warrant any great hope that the improvement will be permanent. Shipments during the last part of the month are always heavier because settlements have to be made, and this accounts for the increase. A decrease may be looked for this week, as lake navigation has now fully opened, and the lake lines will get away with the bulk of the business. It is quite certain that if the present rates are maintained east-bound rail shipments will be lighter than ever before. The abolition of tolls on the Erie Canal will enable vessels to take business at lower rates this season than before. The rail-lines between here and Buffalo would gladly see another reduction in rates made at once, but the New York trunk lines are opposed to it because it would cut down their rates between Buffalo and New York, also, and, as they get all the business from the steamboat lines at Buffalo and other Lake Erie points, they are desirous of keeping the rates as high as possible. They are able to keep the lines running east from Chicago in check, as they have complete control of them, but it is very doubtful whether they will be able to keep the roads running east from other Western points from cutting the rates. It is claimed that the rates on grain and flour are now being cut from Peoria, St. Louis, and other points, and if these charges can be substantiated a general reduction in east-bound rates will have to be made soon. It is the general opinion that another reduction in rates will be made by the Joint Executive Committee at its meeting in New York May 15. If this is not done the trunk lines will find it hard work to keep up the east-bound pooling agreement, as several of the Western roads seem to be ready to kick over the traces. The east-bound live-stock pools are already in very bad condition, and unless great precaution is used the dead-freight pools will soon be in the same predicament.

The total shipments of flour, grain, and provisions by the various roads running East from Chicago during the week ending May 5 amounted to 36,371 tons, against 29,733 tons for the week previous. The shipments for the corresponding week last year amounted to 21,835 tons.

The following statement shows the amount of flour, grain, and provisions shipped from this city by each of the lines running East from this city during the last week, and also the amount of shipments for the corresponding week last year:

The Michigan Central Railroad Company, through its General Passenger Agent, Mr. O. W. Ruggles, gave an excursion yesterday to the representatives of the various railroads in this city and members of the press for the purpose of introducing the new dining-cars, the Australia and Wentworth, which will be placed in regular service on its line between here and Detroit tomorrow. The special train, containing two sleepers, one smoking-car, and the two new dining-cars, left the Central depot at 11 o'clock a. m. with about 100 people on board, and made the run to Niles, Mich., in less than two hours. On the return trip the guests were invited into the dining-cars and treated to an excellent menu. After the meal a meeting was organized and many speeches were made, all eulogistic of the Michigan Central and to its popular General Passenger Agent, Mr. O. W. Ruggles. A committee on resolutions submitted the following:

"The guests of the Michigan Central Railway Company who have today enjoyed the pleasure of assisting in the inauguration of the new dining-cars which are to be run upon this great road, forming part of its popular route from Chicago to Buffalo, desire to express their hearty appreciation of the enterprise, skill, and consideration of the public comfort and enjoyment, which has placed in service cars of such magnificence and completeness as the Australia and Wentworth. Every appliance that experience, good taste, and ability can command seem to be combined in these cars, and it seems impossible that efforts in this direction can go any farther. Certainly these cars and the manner in which they are controlled leave nothing to be desired. To the officers of the Michigan Central, and particularly to our intermediate host, Mr. O. W. Ruggles, who has established his reputation as one of the most successful and enterprising General Passenger Agents in the country, we desire on behalf of the tens of thousands who will hereafter enjoy the luxury afforded by those splendid hotels on wheels, to extend our sincere testimony of approval.

Railway Exposition Items.

Many car-load lots of entries for the National Railway Exposition have already been received. The crowds of workmen engaged in pushing forward the construction of the annexes and in preparing for and receiving exhibits make the Exposition Building and the adjacent grounds suggestive of a beehive at swarming time.

The most remarkable collection of locomotives, both ancient and modern, ever brought together will be exhibited. Nearly all the leading locomotive of the country will show their latest and most perfect products. Among these will be the largest locomotive ever built, weighing over seventy tons, and fitly called the Mastodon.

Mr. A. P. Swineford, Commissioner of Mineral Statistics for Michigan, has for several weeks been collecting and will forward an extensive and interesting collection of ores—especially of iron. Single specimens of these will weigh fully a ton, and the whole exhibit will make several car-loads. Very important collections of ores are also being made for this department in Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, etc.

The electric features of the Railway Exposition will be among the most interesting of all, and will include displays of arc and incandescent lighting by nearly all the electric light companies in the United States. Among the novelties in this department will be that most recent discovery—the storage battery—by means of which electric energy can be accumulated in great quantities, stored for a considerable length of time, carried long distances, and then used to transmit power to motors, to supply electric light, and for various other purposes. Beautiful effects will be produced by the introduction of colored electric lightning in and about the great fountain in the centre of the Exposition Building, creating floods of gorgeous coloring.

The English Commissioner, Mr. G. D. Peters, of London, is now on his way in the steamship Alaska, and is bringing with him many interesting contributions.

Mr. Wilson and His Proposed Diagonal Lines in Wisconsin, Iowa, and Nebraska.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 4.—[Special.]—R. T. Wilson, of New York, capitalist and head of the syndicate which is backing the Wisconsin, Iowa, & Nebraska (Diagonal), has been here several days to make investigation of affairs as to that project. He is a very shrewd, plain, straightforward business-man, talks business only, says what he means, and is a good financier. He says his syndicate had decided to furnish the money to build and equip 400 miles of road, and to establish a diagonal system of roads northeast and southwest across Iowa, Wisconsin, and Nebraska. The project was brought to them by persons who are recognized as good business-men representing Iowa interests. The splendid growth and progress of the State and its agricultural advantages were known to the syndicate in a general way. He sent out men to go over the route who made a favorable report, and work was begun. Immediately he began to receive discouraging statements. The route was not favorable; the country along it would furnish no support; there was no coal; Des Moines, the principal point, and where he expected large business, did not want the road. These reports came from those who professed to be friends of the road. He became distrustful, and ordered all work stopped until he could come and examine the whole matter personally, and the last week he has been over the whole line between here and Waterloo. He declares the farm land the finest he ever saw. He finds between Marshalltown and Des Moines coal almost the entire distance, while the whole of Polk County and the City of Des Moines rests on coal, easily reached. He is satisfied as to the resources of the country along the route. They far exceed his expectation. He has discovered the animus of the statements made to him, and does not hesitate to call them willfully false and founded in rivalry. Now he makes a fair business proposition. He has the money to build and equip the road, but he will not invest it unless the people along the route convince him they want the road and will patronize it after it is built. If the farmers will make reasonable concessions as to right of way, and cities and towns shall make it possible to get through them on fair terms he will go on and complete the road to this city by Nov. 15, and possibly a good distance southwest. To test the matter he will at once put into the field his own agents to secure right of way, who will very soon settle the question so far as he and his syndicate are concerned. He says he has several propositions to take the work already done, and the road from Marshalltown to Waterloo off his hands. He says he is not responsible for what others do or may have said. This is the exact status of this project, and it comes from the only person who has the authority to state it. He does not propose to build the road and equip it, paying for all they get, and have the people directly interested in rival projects by subscriptions and tax-aid subsidies. In other words they must join the procession.

A large delegation of business-men were here Saturday to confer with him as to making that city a point and to hastening the completion of the road. He gave them his terms as set forth above. The committee went home satisfied, and will at once set to work to secure the necessary aid.

NEW YORK, May 4.—[Special.]—Considerable interest is being manifested in the opening of the New York, West Shore & Buffalo Road next month. The exact date has not yet been fixed by the company, and it is likely that only one section will be opened at a time. The terminal arrangements at Weehawken are in a state of perfection, and will soon be completed. The piers, slips, warehouses, and engine-houses are also nearly finished. The passenger-depot, which was only recently contracted for, will be completed during the summer. This, it is said, will be the finest on the continent. The tunnel through Bergen Hill, extending to New Durham, is completed, and tracks laid to Rondout Creek, a distance of ninety miles, and from that point continuously a further distance of seventy-five miles is also laid. The bridge at Rondout is almost completed and ready for the tracks. A large number of construction trains are running on all sections of the road, and between Albany and Schenectady especially many are in use ballasting and otherwise putting the track in use for business. More than 450 miles of track have already been laid, and within thirty days the entire distance from Weehawken to Syracuse will be ready and open for business. A large portion of the company's equipment has been finished. The construction of the road between Syracuse and Buffalo is going rapidly forward and will be finished during the month of October. The company has secured valuable franchises and landings at Forty-second street, at which point a large and commodious structure will be erected. It is also intended to land passengers down-town, and some of the company's property at Jay and Harrison streets will be used for this purpose. The company has also secured valuable property adjacent to that already held by it, to be used as freight and store houses.

Gould's Presence Needed in New York.

NEW YORK, May 5.—[Special.]—It is understood that the complications in the proposed consolidation of the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railroad system are of such a stubborn character as to require Mr. Gould's attention in this city. In order to make the East Tennessee system a part of the Southwestern system, it is necessary to thoroughly consolidate the three roads which form the essential parts of the former system. This preliminary consolidation is being resisted by the stockholders of the Memphis & Charleston and by the Norfolk & Western people. Various threats have been made to force the Norfolk & Western Road into the consolidation, among other possibilities held out being one to the effect that the East Tennessee can connect with the Western North Carolina, and by using that road and the Richmond & Danville system secure the shortest route to Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other Eastern points. W. E. Connor stated today that he thought Mr. Gould would return to New York in about a week—much sooner than he expected—and start out again with President Thomas and Mr. Brice for a careful tour of the East Tennessee, Virginia, & Georgia system.

A New Freight Line to California via the Illinois Central and Southern Pacific Roads.

About two months ago the Illinois Central established a passenger route to California via New Orleans, making close connections with the Southern Pacific trains at that point, charging the same rates as charged by the other California lines. The line has proved more successful than was anticipated, getting considerable of the tourist business. The success of the passenger line has induced the managers of the Illinois Central and Southern Pacific also to establish a through-freight line by way of New Orleans, and the Illinois Central is now prepared to receive and forward business by the new route. It has issued the following tariff on business from Chicago to San Francisco, Maysville, Sacramento, Stockton, Oakland, San Jose, and Los Angeles: First class, $5 per 100 pounds; second, $4; third, $3.25; fourth, $2.50; Class A, $2.25; Class B, $2; Class C, $1.75; Class D, $1.50. The above rates will also apply from all stations in Illinois north of Centralia and Milwaukee, Racine, and Kenosha, Wis. The Illinois Central is also prepared to take business for California points at the same rates via the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern, Texas & Pacific, and Southern Pacific. The Illinois Central expects to do a good business to California via New Orleans, especially during the winter months.

Miscellaneous Notes.

The fast tobacco train, via the Chesapeake & Ohio, left Richmond, Va., May 1 at 7 p. m., arrived at Chicago May 4 at 6 a. m., making the run in two and one-half days, the fastest time ever made.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, in connection with the Evans Transportation Company has issued a through tariff to the Black Hills. The rates from Chicago, Milwaukee, Racine, or St. Louis to Deadwood, Dak., will be $3 per 100 pounds, and to other points in proportion.

The Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, St. Paul & Omaha Roads have issued a joint freight tariff between Chicago, Milwaukee, or Racine, and Superior City, Wis. The new rates will be as follows: First class, 75 cents per 100 pounds; second, 60; third, 45; fourth, 30; fifth, 25; wheat and flour, 30; coarse grain, malt, bran, and millstuffs, 25; salt and cement, 18½; Class A, 35 cents; Class B, 28; Class C, 25; Class D, 20.

The Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg Railroad is rapidly making arrangements to commence to compete actively for the east-bound live-stock traffic. New switches for the accommodation of the road are being placed in position at the north side of the Stock-Yards, where it will establish its live-stock shipping depot. The tracks of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad will be used between the Stock-Yards and Englewood, and from there a double track will be laid to connect with its main line at a point near John B. Sherman's farm.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul gives notice that the train leaving Chicago at 12:05 p. m. via its Council Bluffs Division makes direct connections at Davis Junction for Rockford, Janesville, Madison, Monroe, Shullsburg, Platteville, and Mineral Point. The night express for Prairie du Chien and all points west on the Iowa & Minnesota and Iowa & Dakota Divisions will leave Chicago via Milwaukee at 9 p. m. instead of 5 p. m., as heretofore, arriving at Prairie du Chien at 7:10 a. m. Through sleepers will be attached to this train.

A meeting of representatives of the Central Branch of the Union Pacific, Burlington & Missouri River, and St. Joe & Western Railroads was held yesterday at the office of the Southwestern Railway Association for the purpose of making east-bound rates from points on those lines. There were present: E. B. Vining, Union Pacific; J. J. Rogers and L. A. Emerson, Missouri Pacific; E. B. Ripley, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy; and J. W. Midgley, Commissioner, and E. D. Morse, General Agent, Southwestern Railway Association. Heretofore the rates from points on those lines were not uniform, which caused considerable annoyance to the Southwestern Railway Association, and it was therefore agreed that, commencing May 15, uniform rates should be charged from common territory on the three lines to Mississippi River points and east thereof. The General Agents of these roads will meet in a day or two to agree upon the rates to be charged.

The bone of contention in the meeting of the Southwestern Association, held at St. Louis last Wednesday, turns out to have been the determination on the part of the St. Louis & San Francisco Road to make a lower rate on cattle from their new stock-yards at Red Fork, four miles beyond the Arkansas River, in the Indian Territory, to St. Louis, than has been charged by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé from Hunnewell or Caldwell, Kas., which heretofore have been the chief shipping-points for Texas cattle. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé rate has been $75 per car; the St. Louis & San Francisco proposed to make their rate $65. This difference was exhaustively argued through two sessions of the meeting, when General-Manager Rogers, of the St. Louis & San Francisco, in a spirit of compromise agreed to make his note $67.50. This was not satisfactory, however, to the other roads, and as Rogers would make no other terms the meeting adjourned. Capt. Rogers justifies his action on the ground that his road has over 100 miles shorter haul than the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé, that the Red Fork shortens the cattle-drive about 100 miles, and that he is opening up new business for his road, and must offer some inducement to shippers. Whether this will lead to war on cattle-rates remains to be seen.

Commissioner George H. Daniels, of the Colorado Pool Association, has issued a circular regarding rates and tickets to the reunion of Grand Army of the Republic at Denver next July. He requests connecting lines to prepare and place on sale first class round-trip tickets to Denver. The sale of these tickets will commence July 15 and close July 23, and they will be good going from the Missouri River up to and including July 26, 1883, and returning from Denver to Missouri River points from July 27 to Aug. 5, inclusive. These tickets will be sold only to members of the Grand Army of the Republic, and for members of their families who hold certificates in duplicate, bearing the signature of the Assistant Adjutant-General of the State, and the signature and seal of the Adjutant of the post to which the member belongs. The rate will be $25 for the round trip from Kansas City, Leavenworth, Atchison, Plattsmouth, and Omaha to Denver and return. The rate from Council Bluffs, Pacific Junction, East Nebraska City, and St. Joseph, via the Union Pacific Railway or Burlington & Missouri River Road will be 25 cents more on single trip and 50 cents more on round trip than the amounts given above.

STATE AFFAIRS.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 4.—[Special.]—The closing hours of the session of the Legislature were enlivened by an open break between Gov. Cleveland and Tammany Hall. A bill having passed reorganizing the Department of Immigration in New York, and placing it under the control of a single salaried Commissioner, the Governor nominated ex-Senator W. H. Murtha, of Brooklyn, for the position. The nomination was distasteful to the Tammany Senators, who prevented its immediate confirmation by the aid of the Republican members. The determination of Tammany to force concessions from the new Commissioner before voting for him was very apparent, and this afternoon the Governor sent in a message on the subject, expressing his confidence in the fitness of the nominee, and asserting that the Senate's refusal to confirm him was due to "an overweening greed for the patronage which may attach to the place, and which will not be promised in advance, and in questionable partisanship which is insisted on at the expense of important interests." He closes by saying that the responsibility must rest where it belongs. This direct and unexpected blow at Tammany precipitated a sharp political debate, which lasted until the close of the session, and revealed the fact that the fight between the Democratic factions was again hot and bitter. The nominations of Murtha and of all the Harbormasters and Post-Wardens of New York were effectually hung up by Tammany with Republican aid in retaliation for this attack.

During the session of the Legislature 778 bills were introduced in the Senate and 1,159 in the Assembly. Of these over 350 have already become laws, and there are about 150 more in the Governor's hands waiting action. The greater part of this legislation is of a purely local nature.

TAXEATING.

As the Democrats had not controlled a Legislature before in ten years their greed for the spoils naturally led them to multiply and create offices for their advantage. By a reorganization of departments held by Republican officials and the creation of new places changes were made in the public service of the State which established positions having annual salaries amounting to $91,500, all of which fall to Democrats. The adoption of the free-canal amendment, on the other hand, caused the abolition of a number of offices and a corresponding reduction of expenses.

Through the efforts of the Republican minority bills were passed prohibiting political assessments and providing for the introduction of civil-service reform principles in the State departments. The subject of contract convict labor occupied the attention of the Legislature to a considerable extent, but the only bills passed on the question were one prohibiting the further manufacture of hats in the State prisons and one creating a Bureau of Labor Statistics. The passage and veto of the bill fixing the fare on the elevated roads at five cents was the leading feature of the anti-monopoly move of the session. A special tax on electric light, telephone, and telegraph companies was provided for. A special commission was appointed to consider the advisability of making a public park at Niagara Falls, and a large portion of the Adirondack wilderness was set apart as a public park. Among the other measures of general importance were the Congressional Apportionment bill, the New York Aqueduct bill, which provides for an expenditure of $18,000,000 to furnish an additional water-supply to New York, and may prove a huge political job; bills regulating the receivers of insolvent corporations, providing for the preservation of forests, repealing the objectionable features of the penal code in relation to the observance of Sunday, and a less stringent excise bill. Among the bills which failed were the anti-free pass measure, the regulation of elevator charges, biennial sessions, whipping-post for wife-beaters, and the new charter for New York. The tax rate for next year will be 3.025 mills.

The Michigan Legislature—Extension of Time—Temperance Work—Law Books.

LANSING, Mich., May 4.—[Special.]—The two factions in the matter of extending the time for the completion of the Marquette, Houghton & Ontonagon Railroad agreed to a compromise, and the bill was passed by the Senate. It provides that the time for the completion of the road shall be extended to May 1, 1885, and in prosecuting its work the corporation is not to be required to commence at Ontonagon, but nothing in the resolution is to be construed as permitting in any manner a change of route of the road. This settles, or will settle when it passes the House, a controversy that it was feared would have continued until the road might have lost its valuable land-grant.

The Case bill, reducing the burdens of the liquor-dealers, has taken up two days' time in the House, and is now on the order of third reading, with a very fair prospect of being defeated. The temperance men are not strong enough to pass a prohibitory amendment, which requires a two-thirds majority, but are amply able to prevent the liquor interests from tampering with the present excellent tax and regulation system.

The Senate has tabled the resolution authorizing the appointment of a commission to investigate the advisability of the State purchasing the Michigan Southern and Michigan Central Railways. Under the charters of these roads the State will soon have a right to purchase them if it desires to, but there is no likelihood that the Commonwealth will go into the railroad business again, as its former experience in that line was not very satisfactory.

The Governor has signed the bill for the purchase of the Howell compilation of the laws, a measure which puts many thousands of dollars into the pockets of a firm of Chicago law publishers.

HOW A MAN WALKS.

One of the most remarkable things about a man's walk is the diagonal movement which characterizes it. The reader may imagine the hands and feet to form the four corners of a parallelogram, and the diagonal limbs are of course the right arm and left leg and the left arm and right leg. By "diagonal movement" we therefore intend to convey the fact that the diagonal limbs during locomotion always swing in the same direction. A soldier on parade keeps his arms motionless by his side, and on no account must they be allowed to vibrate. This is not what he would naturally do if left to himself.

Watch any one person out of the hundreds walking along the streets, and it will be seen that he invariably swings his arms as he goes along, perhaps to an extreme degree if he be a rustic, and less so if he be town bred. The arms swing by the body like a couple of pendula, and with a speed which entirely depends upon the rate at which he may be walking. The athlete, anxious to complete the given number of laps in a mile or a couple of miles and outstrip his competitors, swings his arms to and fro with a quickness which corresponds with the motion of his swift feet; the business-man also swings his arms with a motion which, if not so quick, exactly times with the motion of his legs; and even the idle man about town, lounging along some fashionable quarter, unconsciously gives a slow motion to his arms which corresponds to his tardy legs.

Now, if the motion be even carelessly observed, it will be found that the right arm swings forward at the same time as the left leg, and when the right leg is advancing it is the left arm which accompanies it. This is the natural gait, and to convince one's self that it is so it is only requisite to get a friend to walk across the room in the opposite fashion—i. e., to swing the right arm forward when stepping out with the right leg, and then, in the same manner, when bringing forward the left leg, to accompany it with the left arm. Such a gait is both unnatural and uncomfortable to the person who tries it, and also ludicrous to the observer who watches a first attempt of the kind. The diagonal movement of the limbs is therefore the natural method adopted by man when walking, and it is the first and most apparent fact that one ascertains in studying human locomotion.

38 AND 70.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 3.—[New York Times.]—Mrs. Reid, widow of Col. Reid, brother of Whitelaw Reid, of the New York Tribune, was married in this city today to John M. Quackenbos, of Brooklyn. She came here ten days ago alone, and at first went to the Tontine Hotel, but subsequently took a room at the Selden House. It was soon whispered about that she was waiting the arrival of her intended husband, and that they were to be quietly wedded in church. It was reported that the groom was a gentleman of large wealth, much the senior in age, and bearing an old and respected name. All this proved to be true. Mrs. Reid is about 38 years old, while her husband is 70. She received the bridegroom this morning in the hotel parlors, and later in the day they were quietly married, and then took the train for New York. It is supposed that it is a runaway match, and that Mr. Quackenbos had good reasons to evade certain relatives who have been anxiously awaiting the final disposition of his property. The sequel, it is thought, may not be unlike that of the famous Hicks-Lord case in New York.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

Playing Ball in the Streets.

CHICAGO, May 4.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Among the many existing nuisances that mark the present Democratic reign is that of playing ball in the most prominent streets of our city. Daily, between the hours of 12 and 1, from La Salle street to Fifth avenue, can be seen a crowd of boys, ofttimes men, endangering the lives of those passing, and causing the thoroughfare to be feared by many.

This is an annoyance that ought certainly to be abated, and we earnestly hope that our officials will take steps to suppress it.

A MERCHANT IN THE VICINITY.

Hung Up.

CHICAGO, May 5.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Will you please inform me as well as others interested what has become of Senator Cloonan's bill regulating pawnbrokers? As you have always taken a lively interest in such matters, I thought it would be proper to inform you that a well-founded rumor is current that $5,000 is being subscribed to defeat the bill. I am personally acquainted with one of the subscribers—hence the question. If you do not see fit to publish this note I wish you would keep this important question before the public. It seems that all interest in the affair has subsided. That you will lend all aid in favoring the passage of this bill, in order to compel those usurers to conduct their business on a reasonable basis, is the wish of a VICTIM.

The Newsboy Nuisance.

CHICAGO, May 5.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Cannot something be said to abate the nuisance of newsboys in the cars, opening the front door and yelling at the top of their lungs or pushing through the car in all their dirt and nastiness? Yesterday, in a trip up-town, the front door was opened some twenty times and the usual yell let off and a cold draft sent through the car that chilled every one, and twelve of the muddy, dirty ragamuffins pushed their way through the crowded car, not only to the discomfort but positive injury of the passengers and their clothes. I think that the conductors should be instructed to forbid them coming on the cars at all, at least on crowded cars and of a rainy day, or if any privileges are allowed them let it be only to get on the back platform and never to enter a car, as any one wanting a paper while on a car can and will gladly get up and go to the door for it. Please put this in your paper and let us see how others feel on this subject. H. G. B.

STORAGE BATTERIES.

Their Practical Value Questioned—Do the Lead Plates Deteriorate?—Prolonged and Intricate Litigation.

[N. Y. Post, May 3.]—During the last few weeks it has been rumored that the storage batteries, of which so much has been written of late, and a form of which the Brush Electric Light Company are preparing, according to the officers of the company, to put in for lighting New York buildings, are not quite what was hoped. Some specimen batteries, manufactured by the Faure Storage Battery Company of Belgium, were sent over to this country by the Labrador about a year ago, since when little has been done to put the system into practical use. The original American Force & Light Company, holding patents from the Belgian Faure Company, became entangled in a number of suits with the parent company, which are not yet settled. In the meantime the original American company sold rights covering the whole of the United States to four sub-companies. The Trustees of the company holding the rights for New York and the most important States of the Union, the Faure Electric Accumulator Company, are Messrs. H. H. Tallmadge, D. T. Carson, W. B. Whiting, L. C. Tallmadge, F. T. Morton, J. L. Miller, G. M. Phelps Jr., D. H. Bates, A. G. Davis, W. C. Humstone, C. A. Tinker, James M. Orme, and S. S. Sargent. Last autumn the sub-company holding the rights for railroad-car accumulators put some batteries upon the Pennsylvania Railroad, but they have since been taken off, owing, according to the officers of the company, to the litigation in which the patent rights were involved.

Among some scientific men who have studied the matter attentively the storage battery is still regarded as an expensive toy, containing perhaps the germ of a great discovery, but as yet unfit for practical work. The trouble with it is that after a number of charges the lead plates deteriorate and become worthless. At first the batteries or accumulators work well, although, according to Prof. Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania, not more than 15 per cent of the electricity which is put into an accumulator can be drawn out of it again. The enthusiasm of investigators has usually lasted until the battery had been recharged repeatedly, when serious trouble began to appear and the lead plates had to be renewed.

Three months ago a New York patent lawyer was sent to Europe to examine the Sellon-Volckmar storage battery on behalf of some American capitalists who thought of investing money in the company which holds rights for this country under the Faure patents. This expert has recently returned, and was called upon by a reporter of the Evening Post, to whom he told the following story: He investigated the whole subject of storage batteries from a business point of view, and consulted Preece, the head of the English telegraph lines, Lockyer and Siemens, the well-known scientists, and, indirectly, Sir William Thomson, who first gave reputation to the Faure battery by describing it in a series of letters to the London Times. The conclusion reached by the American expert was not favorable to the battery, upon the ground that the lead plates do not last sufficiently long to make the operation of the batteries economical.

The Evening Post contained a few days ago an account of the preparations making by the Brush Electric Light Company of this city to light up the Madison Square Theatre and several business buildings with Brush secondary batteries and Swan lamps. The Faure Company are now suing the Brush Company for infringement of patents, and counter suits by Brush to prevent the sale or use of Faure batteries are said to be forthcoming.

To sum up the matter, nothing practical has yet been done with the batteries, although they have been here for a year, and Prof. Barker, Edison, and Stephen D. Field, who have all given considerable study to the matter, do not yet consider the storage battery a practical aid to the use of electricity, while admitting that its possibilities are great. Prof. Morton, of the Stevens Institute in Hoboken, has recently delivered a rather enthusiastic lecture upon the battery, but may have been led to conclusions which further experiments may not justify.

ABSURDITIES OF MEN'S DRESS.

Trousers are not economical, inasmuch as they get baggy at the knee long before they are worn out, and they are always getting dirty at the ankles. They are not specially adapted for cold or for wet. On a wet day it is the part from the knee downward that catches the rain and necessitates the changing of the whole garment. Indeed, it is the way in which they ignore the knee-joint which renders trousers so practically objectionable. It is at this joint they drag and not only spoil their own shape, but inflict a sense of tightness over the whole body by means of braces.

Why are buttons placed on the back of a coat? Mr. Gotch remarks that the tailor says they are there to "mark the waist." But why should the waist be marked? As a matter of fact, the only reason for the existence of these two buttons is they are a survival from the time when they were of use, when men buttoned back the long flaps of their coats in order to walk more freely, or found them useful in sustaining the sword-belt. We have no flaps now, we wear no swords now; then why keep the two buttons? Another rudimentary organ may be found at the end of the sleeve. There is always a cuff, marked generally by a double row of stitches, which perform no useful service, unless it be to remind us that our grandfathers had facings to their sleeves, and that the little buttons which still appear at the end were of real use when the sleeve was tight at the wrist. Another inevitable feature of the coat is the collar. In old times this collar was of some service; it was large and turned up well in inclement weather; in order to admit of its buttoning properly around the neck a nick was necessary. But, though we hardly ever think of turning up an ordinary coat collar, and find it of little use if we do, we still preserve both it and the nick as survivals. The stovepipe hat, too, is only the carcase on which our ancestors were wont to display ribbons, and knots, and other gauds. In itself it is both ugly and uncomfortable. Then we wear absurd neckties that do not tie, and pins that do not pin.

THE POCASSET FIEND.

BOSTON, Mass., May 5.—In the Supreme Court application was made by counsel for Charles Freeman, who killed his child at Pocasset in April, 1879, while under religious fanaticism, for the release of Freeman on bail, on the ground that he was now a sane man. Chief-Justice Morton said the full court did not feel that the time had arrived when, after exposure to the temptations of the world, Freeman might not have a recurrence of religious excitement, and refused to admit him to bail. It was stated that if the Attorney-General, after further examination of the case, should see fit to nolle pros. the indictment the court would acquiesce. If, however, the case was pressed for trial a special session would be convened at Barnstable.

Burglars entered W. E. Clark's store at No. 230 Wabash avenue Friday night and stole about $250 worth of clothing and dress goods. The plunder was found yesterday morning, however, concealed under a wagon in the rear of No. 217 State street. No clew to the burglars.

Prof. and Mrs. Elisha Gray entertained the teachers and pupils of Highland Hall at their beautiful home in Highland Park Friday evening. The young ladies of the school appeared in fancy costumes. A portrait of Prof. Gray's youngest son, by Eichbaum, of St. Louis, just completed, was exhibited for the first time. Mr. Eichbaum was among the guests.

Prof. Albion Grimes, the well-known dancing-master, has died from lockjaw. He was born in 1839, in Castlecary, Somersetshire, England. He served in the Crimean war in the 102d regiment foot volunteers. He came here in 1871 and established a dancing academy on the West Side. His funeral takes place at 1 o'clock this afternoon from his late home, No. 13 Halsted street.

A newsboy named Owney Harney, 8 years of age, whose parents reside at No. 40 Pearson street, in jumping off a Wells street limit car, No. 143, at half-past 7 o'clock last evening, at the corner of Pearson street, fell, and, his head coming in contact with some of the ironwork about the car, received a terrible cut behind the left ear, severing an artery and causing his death in a few minutes.

The West Side street-car conductors and drivers held a meeting at No. 54 West Lake street last night. They claimed that it had no significance whatever attached to it, and reporters were excluded. Several conductors were asked if there was a probability that the men would strike for higher wages, but they merely answered that they couldn't say, as this question would be settled by their association.

The committee having the matter in charge yesterday agreed to recommend to the County Board that the care of the insane awaiting trial be hereafter turned over to the County Physician, and that he be allowed $2,500 per year with which to employ attendants and an assistant physician. The Sheriff will continue to feed them, but the County Physician is to have authority to order for the unfortunates whatever he may think they need.

Beginning with Monday morning the Lincoln avenue, limits, and Webster avenue cars running on Clark and State streets will go west on Division and north on Wells to the end of their routes, and return the same way. This change is necessary owing to the laying of a new track on Clark street from Division to North avenue. The little delay in switching at Clark and Division street will be made up by running faster while on the road. The track-laying will take about two weeks.

Superintendent Lieb, of the Water Department, is having some correspondence with the South Park Commissioners in the interest of the tenants of houses on Michigan avenue. It seems that employés of the Commissioners are in the habit of attaching hose to the private taps and watering trees and sprinkling the grass without paying for the water. When the tenants find that their supply can be cut off and the amount they have paid for six months will be forfeited, they will doubtless stop this illegal use of water.

There is a rumor afloat that it is proposed to cut down the present State militia force from 8,000 to 5,000, and in Chicago to consolidate the First and Second Regiments. As a matter of fact, the militia force of the State is now not more than 5,000. If any attempt at consolidation should be made here it would meet strong opposition, for one organization would have to lose its identity. It would prove disastrous too, as it would remove competition, leaving but one militia organization in existence in this city. It is not at all likely that anything of the kind will be done.

There were 922 deaths in the city last month, a decrease of forty-six from the preceding one and of eighty-one from the corresponding week last year. Of the decedents 440 were under 5 years of age, 290 under 1 year, thirty-six between 70 and 80, eighteen between 80 and 90, and two between 90 and 100. Fuller, General Passenger Agent of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, has just contracted to transport the Catherine Lewis opera company from Richmond, Va., to Chicago by special train over the Chesapeake & Ohio and Louisville, New Albany & Chicago Railroad. The train will consist of baggage, day coach, and Pullman sleeper. This is the first time that a special train was run such a distance for any theatrical company. The train leaves Richmond midnight Friday, and arrives in Chicago Sunday morning at 8 a. m. in charge of Mr. Chapin, Mr. Fuller's assistant.

The funeral services of the late Michael Bonfield were held at St. James Catholic Church yesterday morning. The Rev. Patrick Riordan officiated as celebrant at a solemn high mass of requiem, being assisted by the Rev. J. Dunn as Deacon and Father Erhardt as Subdeacon. The altar and surroundings were tastefully draped in black, and in front of the altar was placed a velvet antependium of black velvet, ornamented in the centre with a heavily embroidered cross of silver braid. After the mass Father Riordan delivered a brief eulogy upon the life and virtues of the deceased, and addressed words of consolation to the bereaved family. He then incensed the casket, and, after sprinkling it with holy water, pronounced the final absolution over the body. The floral offerings were many and beautiful, and completely covered the coffin. The pall-bearers were ex-Ald. Reidy, John Healy, James McKinna, James Maher, Michael Connelly, and Daniel Healy. A long line of carriages followed the hearse to Calvary Cemetery, where the body was interred.

The criminal libel case of Mrs. Green, the artist, against Messrs. Hatch and Scott, of the Herald, came up again yesterday morning before Justice Prindiville, and was again continued, this time on the motion of the plaintiff, Mr. Trude being engaged before Judge Rogers. While the case went over until Saturday morning, it was with the understanding that it was to be continued for another week, since Mr. Storrs, defendants' counsel, will then be in the Criminal Court defending Jere Dunn. All the witnesses on both sides were present, and the fifty odd men and women were decidedly disgusted when told to come around at 11 o'clock the 19th inst.

The annual conclave of the Supreme Temple, Patriarchal Circle, which will be held in this city July 11, 12, and 13, will doubtless be numerously attended. It is now certain that a large number of temples will be in line in the grand procession the 12th. Liberal prizes for competitive drill and military band contests will be awarded. The base-ball grounds and Battery D Armory have been engaged for these contests. Committees of Occidental Temple in this city have been at work for several weeks past making necessary arrangements for the event. The Executive Committee meets at the Sherman House every Wednesday evening, and the Finance Committee every Thursday at 12 m. at the Grand Pacific.

UNFIT FOR OCCUPANCY.

The Tenement-House Inspectors examined five houses, 112 factories, 203 stores, and thirty-three miscellaneous buildings last week; served sixteen notices, and abated sixteen nuisances.

No. 321 South Lincoln street, owned by Mrs. Wentworth, of No. 161 Centre avenue, is in a general unsanitary condition, and unfit for habitation. The plumbing is bad, the drainage very bad, there being no sewer connection, and the water-closets dilapidated, filthy, and offensive.

No. 671 Van Buren street, owned by H. Bahe, has a foot of sewage under the kitchen floor, the drainage being very bad.

No. 323 South Lincoln, owned by John McDermot, is without sewer connection, and the vaults are full and offensive.

No. 53 South Halsted, Griffin & Dwight agents, is not properly ventilated, and there is an open catch-basin in the house.

No. 194 North Morgan, owned by E. Goodrich, has defective plumbing, a leaky roof, and a broken stairway.

ARCHITECT GAY'S GIFT.

Mr. Henry Lord Gay, the Chicago architect who a year ago gained an enviable reputation among architects and artists through his design for a monument for King Victor Emmanuel, has presented the model, drawings, and descriptive matter to the Illinois Industrial University at Champaign. The President of the university has acknowledged the gift, accompanying his letter with a copy of a series of resolutions passed by the Board of Trustees, which, among other things, direct the preparation of a place suitable for the reception and permanent preservation of the design in the museum of engineering and architecture. The competition in which this model played so prominent a part was remarkable. There were 293 designs in the competition from all parts of the world, with over 3,000 drawings and 160 models. Mr. Gay, who chanced to be sojourning in Rome and Toulon, entered for the prize, and on the first award was given second place. He was at length put back to fourth, and finally to fifth place, and was given second place in honorable mention.

APOLLO COMMANDERY'S EXCURSION.

Grand-Commander Henry Turner, of this State, has issued a special dispensation granting Apollo Commandery Knights Templar permission to make a pilgrimage to Europe, and recommending them to all Templars abroad as true and courteous Knights. The Most Eminent Grand Master of the United States, Benjamin Dean, has also granted dispensation allowing the Commandery to pass through the several jurisdictions equipped for the European tour. In answer to inquiries, Apollo Commandery extends a cordial and fraternal invitation to Sir Knights of any Commandery, or other grand jurisdiction, or Mason in good standing, to accompany them upon this pilgrimage to the extent of the full limit of the number of berths which have have been secured on the steamer City of Rome—to-wit: 202—upon their application to do so to Sir Samuel Henderson, Recorder of the Commandery, Room 8, Court-House, Chicago. All who may desire to go should decide quickly, and deposit $50 by May 10, or very soon thereafter, to secure a berth on the steamer, it being the custom of all steamship companies to require an advance deposit, part of which will be returned should the person paying it be unavoidably prevented from going.

THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

Horatio C. Burchard, the Director of the United States Mint, was at the Grand Pacific last evening on his way to Washington. "I have been home," said he to a TRIBUNE reporter, "to prepare my report on the gold and silver production of the United States for the last calendar year."

"When will that report be ready?" asked the reporter.

"It will be out of the hands of the printer in about a month or so."

"Can you give me any of the figures?"

"No, I cannot. The report will be mainly statistical."

"How about the coinage of the silver dollar; is the law being complied with?"

"Yes. We are coining about 2,350,000 of silver dollars per month. The law says that the Secretary of the Treasury shall purchase $2,000,000 worth of silver bullion each month, which shall be coined into silver dollars. Secretary Folger is living up to that law. The mint service is running well. The silver bullion is purchased and paid for in silver dollars. The reason that the Treasury is loaded up with silver is because the law says that the public may take its silver dollars to the Treasury and get silver certificates for them. The silver dollars are held in trust for these certificates, and as long as this provision of the law remains the silver dollars must be stored in the Treasury."

HEAVY JUDGMENTS.

Two confessions of judgment were entered up yesterday in the Superior Court against Samuel P. Parmly, a Dearborn street real-estate dealer, one for $24,522 in favor of Mrs. Harriet J. Sumner, the other for $47,750, in favor of Mrs. Harriet Sumner, Mrs. Clara S. Parmly, and Mrs. Hattie S. Parmly. Mr. Parmly confessed judgment. Mr. H. C. Parmly, a partner of the gentleman mentioned, informed a TRIBUNE reporter that the transaction in the court was a sort of friendly arrangement to protect both his brother and Mrs. Sumner.

"The origin of this," he continued, "lies away back in a complicated land transaction of ten years ago. My brother lived in New Orleans at that time. He bought a large tract of land in Chattanooga, Tenn., paying $5,000 cash down and giving notes for the remainder. Before the notes became due he found that he had been taken in in the purchase through misrepresentations. The notes were held by a firm named Raht & Gillespie, of Chattanooga, and secured by a mortgage on the property. This mortgage was foreclosed and the land sold, and as it did not realize nearly the amount of the notes my brother was held responsible for the balance. Losing $5,000 was enough, he thought, and so this old claim of ten years ago has never been settled. The representatives of Raht & Gillespie have now sued for the amount, balance and interest, and the trial comes on in the Supreme Court on the 8th inst. Mrs. Sumner is a very large property-holder, and my brother is her agent. She holds a number of judgment-notes of his, and she, and my wife, and my brother's wife have filed these notes, so that the property will be protected in case of an adverse decision."

NEW TELEGRAPH COMPANIES.

A TRIBUNE reporter called on the officials of the Western Union Telegraph Company yesterday and inquired as to the standing and backing of the District Telegraph and the Merchants' Union Telegraph Companies, which attempted Friday night to rush orders through the Council permitting them to string wires on iron poles. When the District Telegraph ordinance was introduced Ald. Wickersham hazarded an opinion that it was in the interest of the Western Union. It was learned that the incorporators of the District Telegraph Company are C. Cady Louis, who conducts a fertilizing establishment, and Louis Gulliand and F. H. Roeschland, clerks. The capital stock is placed on paper at $20,000. Whatever the purpose of the incorporators may be, it has been ascertained that the Western Union is in no way identified with the scheme. Superintendent Tubbs, of the Western Union, said yesterday that the plan of stringing wires on iron poles had been tried in New York, but had been abandoned as unsatisfactory. By referring to his scrap-book he showed that the Merchants' Union Telegraph Company was incorporated Feb. 2, 1883, the incorporators being John J. Curran, Henry H. Evans, and Conrad L. Niehoff. Just what the incorporators of this concern hoped to accomplish he could not imagine.

HIGH LICENSE.

THE STATE OF AFFAIRS IN BUFFALO—WHAT HAS BEEN DONE.

Mr. J. H. Dormer, of Buffalo, who is a guest of Mr. Joseph McDonald, at No. 351 Chestnut place, was interviewed by a TRIBUNE reporter last night on the progress made by the high license cause in the Queen City of the Lakes. Mr. Dormer, who has taken an active part in the agitation of the high-license movement in Buffalo, said that the Excise laws of the State of New York were excellent, but had been disregarded for years. The liquor traffic had assumed enormous proportions and was a heavy burden on the city. The Charity Organization Society started out to effect a reform which would be in the interest both of economy and morality. A delegation which represented all the clergymen and all the leading business-men of the city presented to the Excise Commissioners a request that the license for selling whisky be raised to $250 and that for beer to $75. The request was not granted, but this much was accomplished—the whisky license was raised from $40 to $75 and the beer license from $10 to $30. The number of saloons in Buffalo is in the ratio of one to ninety-six persons, and the license is believed to be lower than that of any other city in the country.

The Citizens' Reform Association is now following in the footsteps of the Charity Organization Society, and proposes, by adopting a system of registering all saloonkeepers and investigating their antecedents, to eliminate the disreputable element in the business and ultimately obtain a higher scale of licenses. The association will see that grocers are not permitted to sell liquor by the glass, as they have been in the past, and that innkeepers do not dispense the stimulating fluid by the measure. During the last few years nearly 1,000 grocers have been selling intoxicating beverages in Buffalo and virtually conducting saloons. The movement in Buffalo has been a moderate one and has received the hearty support, not only of the Roman Catholic clergy, but of the clergymen of all other denominations. Mr. Dormer believes that, owing to the wise policy pursued in the past, the outlook for high-license legislation in Buffalo is most promising.

AUSTRALIAN VISITORS.

LORDS AND LADIES OF THE SOIL ON THEIR WAY TO SEE BARNUM.

Among the prominent arrivals in Chicago Friday were the Princess Togarah, Mr. and Mrs. Cargarah and child, and Messrs. Dinarah, Tinendella, Warahsinbin, Wanging, and Oringinbit. The names may seem somewhat strange, probably because it is the first time that they appear in print. They are certainly unfamiliar to the reader, because the distinguished foreigners hail from a point several thousand miles north of Melbourne, on the Australian coast, and are believed to be the first Australian blacks ever brought to this country. They are nine in all, including two females and a "picaninny," and were procured by E. A. Cunningham, the special agent of P. T. Barnum. They came to this city by way of San Francisco, and left by the 11 o'clock train Friday night for Baltimore.

While they were stowed away during the afternoon in a room of the Union Depot they were visited by a TRIBUNE reporter. The sight would have gladdened the heart of an evolutionist. The men are coal black, but differ in several respects from their African cousins. They have the same wide noses—wider, if anything—prominent cheek-bones, and small, receding chins. Their heads are covered, not with wool, but with the glossiest of curly hair. Their lips are not as thick as the negro's; their teeth are of faultless ivory. A dentist who examined their mouths pronounced the teeth to absolutely perfect. But their legs—well, the articles that pass for legs, are veritable pipe-stems. That their nether limbs are so emaciated is probably due to the fact that they never wore pantaloons in their native wilds. However, this is no drawback—indeed, this exceeding thinness of the legs will enable the Australians to adapt themselves to the style of trousers which are now so fashionable.

The strangers were all puffing clay pipes when the reporter saw them, and were moving about with an awkwardness which cannot be imagined by people accustomed to wear clothes from infancy. One of the gang, who rejoiced in the thinnest of thin legs—apparently he was the dude of the outfit—swayed unsteadily up to the reporter and proceeded to make friends at once by anxiously inquiring, "Money—rumme?"

Mr. Tinendella—for such was his name—had evidently succeeded in grasping two of the ideas of civilization. Strange that the desires of a savage just brought face to face with the enlightenment of the nineteenth century should centre upon two things—rum and money. But if the young Australian is ever given a taste of ward politics life will have a third charm for him.

Two of the blacks have learned to talk a little English, but the others have had none of the bloom of barbarism rubbed off them. Their big, muddy brown eyes, with black pupils, gaze at one with the pathos of a dog's eyes, and with an expression which suggests nothing so much as the sudden dawn of intelligence in the eyes of a gorilla. A curious incident happened during the reporter's visit. Two city negroes came in to look at the Australians, but the latter turned away from the colored men jabbering their dislike. "Well, I'll be hanged," exclaimed one of the Ethiopians as he walked off, and from this remark it may be gathered that he reciprocated the feelings of his distant relatives.

As it is claimed that the Australian captives are cannibals, the reporter questioned one who understood a little English. Mr. Dinarah caught the idea at once, and it is due to him to state that in his own peculiar way he indignantly denied the allegation. Some attention, of course, was given to the females, and one of them, with all respect to Mrs. Burnett, may be termed "a fair barbarian." She is the so-called Princess. She is about 18 years old, and in her own way is as pretty and well formed a savage as one can imagine. Her features, such as they are, are harmonious; her teeth are dazzling, and her eyes melting. When she smiles a shy, far-off desert smile, the effect is anything but unpleasant. She fills the rôle of Mrs. Dinarah after the "traveling—theatrical—company" fashion. She has a velvety voice, and fortunately she has no hole through the inner part of her nose such as the men have. The latter, when they get through smoking, stick their pipes through this convenient aperture, and once having plugged the hole they show a disposition to dance. Little can be said in praise of Mrs. Cargarah, who, probably because she is very homely, makes no pretensions to being a King's daughter. Like the others, she is tattooed about the body, her breast and arms having been cut by sharp instruments and the skin raised in strips. When the reporter solicitously asked her if she was hungry, she scratched her knee in a meditative manner, spat into the nearest pail, and said, "Haven't had a smell of missionary for three months."

This is not a literal translation of her remark, but, judging from her tone, it is probably the substance. In no way do the Australians show their susceptibility to civilizing influences more than in their frequent and indiscriminate expectoration. True, their aim is not yet as accurate as that of the average American in a street-car, but this is a failing which a short residence in this country will surely overcome.

THE GRAND JURY.

ELECTION FRAUDS—NON-ENFORCEMENT OF THE 12 O'CLOCK ORDINANCE.

The grand jury yesterday made a final return and was discharged. It reported forty-two true bills, among which was one against one of the ballot-box manipulators in the Second Ward at the late election, and fifty-seven no bills, the latter being generally for small offenses. It found considerable difficulty, it appears, in following up the alleged election frauds in the Second and Fourteenth Wards, but the story will be better told, perhaps, by quoting from the report submitted. After speaking of the difficulty surrounding looking into the complaint cases, the report says:

"For example, in the matter of election frauds in the Sixth Precinct of the Fourteenth Ward there would seem to be no use in preferring charges if no better evidence to sustain the charges can be obtained. And the grand jury strongly condemns the practice of placing in such important offices as judges of election such as the witnesses appeared to be that were brought before us. Unable to express themselves intelligently in the English language, and with an almost total lack of the knowledge necessary to perform their duties properly, what can be expected but fraud and errors at the elections?

"In the matter of the palpable alterations of the figures in the poll-book, and forgeries of the names of the judges and clerks, and a substitution of a false tally-sheet of the Fourth Precinct of the Second Ward, whilst a true bill was found in one case, there should have been means found to trace through the hackman or otherwise what became of the missing poll-box after it left Oppenheimer's saloon at 10 o'clock on the Thursday and up to 4 o'clock of the same day when delivered to the Returning Board.

"Some evidence was heard relative to the grave charges made in some of the daily papers in the action of the County Undertaker in the disposal of the dead bodies from the County Hospital; but except some effort is made first to prepare the case for examination no good, we fear, will result in bringing the case before a grand jury. A large part of the cases coming before the grand jury were committed at hours when all saloons are supposed to be closed, and yet most of the law-breakers were traced before or after the act to saloons in full blast. If the 12 o'clock ordinance was rigidly enforced it seems to your grand jury that some of the evils might be prevented. A complaint in relation to policy shops, so called, a smaller species of gambling, was also partially heard, but the witnesses in the case had to be dropped. It looked, however, as if the effort had been projected against the smaller fry, with a silence regarding the notoriously larger and guilded gambling houses proper, and the whole pushed with a very weak endeavor to punish the guilty."

The report closed with saying that the jurors had visited the Insane Asylum, County Infirmary, and County Hospital, all of which institutions they found in an excellent condition, and congratulating the county upon having been able to secure the services of such faithful and efficient public servants as Dr. Spray and Warden Dixon.

CONDUIT TESTS.

TRYING A MILE OF UNDERGROUND WIRE.

The Chicago Sectional Electric Underground Company invited the Mayor and City Council and a number of gentlemen interested in the telegraph and telephone business to witness some underground-wire tests at the Postal Telegraph Company's offices on Thirty-third and Thirty-ninth streets yesterday. A special car left the Rock Island depot at 2:15 carrying the party to Thirty-third street, the company's temporary office being at the corner of Thirty-third and Arnold streets. Among those present were Mr. J. E. Fuller, manager of the company; Mr. G. W. Felton, Western Union; Mr. Fay, Chicago Telephone Company; Mr. Knapp, Board of Trade Telegraph Company; Mr. Fairbanks, New York, and Mr. Swarthout, both of the Postal Telegraph Company; Prof. Gray, Mr. Edward Koch, Prof. Barrett, ex-Chief McGarigle, Col. Peters, and Messrs. Cullerton, Meier, Lawler, Geohegan, Sullivan, Appleton, and Wanzer of the City Council. The conduit had been beteen Thirty-ninth and Thirty-third streets, but owing to the heavy rains of Friday the work of completing the connection had been much delayed and was not quite finished when the party arrived.

After some delay the instruments were erected, the wires attached, and the first message via a mile of buried wire flashed along the line to New York. It was plainly demonstrated that the wires worked satisfactorily through the conduit, so far as telegraphing was concerned. Prof. Gray tried to communicate by telephone, but with very little success. He said he could hear what Mr. Cushing, the New York operator, said, but he could not make Mr. Cushing understand what he said. It was intended to have some experiments or exhibitions in duplex-telegraphy and printing by telegraph, but owing to the delay and the fact that the arrangements were imperfect these were postponed. The conduit, which is of iron, contains two chainwork shelves made from copper-wire. As many as fifty wires may rest on each shelf, and below the shelves is a space for the large cables. The wires are strongly insulated, and may be packed together without any deterioration in service from induction. The system costs about $6,000 per mile, and the company states that it will be much cheaper in the city than the ordinary overground wires. It is intended to put down an extra large size for the centre of the city, so that any number of lines may be accommodated.

CHEAP GAS.

MR. BILLINGS COMING ON THE SOUTH SIDE.

County Commissioner Albright had an interview with the President of the People's Gaslight & Coke Company yesterday, and he agreed to furnish the new Court-House and the Jail and Criminal Court Building with gas on and after July 1 at the rate of $1.50 per 1,000 feet. The price heretofore paid has been $2 per 1,000, and the change of figures, it is said, will save the county about $4,000 per year. The proposition will be laid before the board tomorrow, and action upon it will be urged by the opponents of the idea of substituting the electric light for gas.

This action on the part of Mr. Billings is an indication that the gas war is to be even more lively than was expected, and confirms the surmise that it was the intention of the President of the West Side company to cross the river and invade the territory of the other company. What is commonly known as the South Side company was the first one chartered; after it had begun operations the other one got a charter and also began to lay pipes on the same streets. It was soon seen that this would not do, and so a compromise was made by which the territory was divided, one company taking the West Side and the other the rest of the city. It was also agreed that neither should interfere with the other. That has been lived up to till now, and though Mr. Billings has often cast an envious eye across the river, he has never crossed it. Now, however, he is going to compete for the profitable business in the South Division.

This places the Chicago Gas-Light & Coke Company in an unpleasant position. In addition to the competition from the new company to the south of it, it is threatened with this invasion from the West, the result of which, however, will simply be cheaper gas. Mr. Billings, it will be seen, has reduced his rates decidedly below the new ones of the South Side company. A reporter called yesterday evening at Mr. Billings' house for the purpose of ascertaining whether he was ready to supply other large consumers in the South Division, such as the hotels, with gas, and what arrangements he had made for the laying of mains to supply them from his West Side works. Unfortunately, however, he was ill, and unable to reply to the questions put to him.

SUBURBAN.

LAKE.

During the last week 123 horses arrived at the Stock-Yards. The market has been inactive during the week and but few sales were made to Chicago parties. Truck horses were in demand and sold well. Many were reshipped to the Eastern and Northern markets, where it is said the demand exceeds the supply.

A tier of twenty-five chutes for the loading and unloading of heavy cattle have been erected from Laurel street, a distance of three blocks west. The chutes are considerably larger than the usual kind, and were made so as to accommodate the larger stock cars introduced by the Fort Wayne Road.

The Transit Company is demolishing Block 11 in the Burlington division of the yards. The work of rebuilding will begin when the débris is removed.

During the week twenty building-permits were issued, all for frame dwellings, which will be erected in the territory between Halsted and State streets, and Thirty-ninth and Sixty-first.

LAKE VIEW.

At an election for officers of the Board of Education for District No. 1, Col. Thomas Shirley was elected President and James S. Osgood Secretary. The contract for the new schoolhouse to be erected at the corner of Wrightwood and Orchard has been let, and the work of erecting the same will proceed without delay. It is to be a brick building, costing about $12,000.

The faculty and pupils of the Lake View High-School tendered a very pleasing welcome in the shape of a banquet on Friday evening to their returned Principal, Prof. A. F. Nightingale, who has been spending the winter in Southern California. A delightful evening was passed. All rejoiced in his return and his restored health.

An ordinance repealing the ordinance passed May 22, 1882, of the South Chicago Horse-Railway Company, was ordered engrossed, as was also one repealing the grant to the Metropolitan Gas Company.

Mr. Goodrich stated that he left a sick-bed to attend the meeting, as he heard these matters were to be rushed through. He made several points of order, but the President decided that they were not well taken. He wanted the Attorney's opinion, and wanted to know what the reason was why they should be repealed. No reason was given, and engrossment was ordered, Goodrich and Webster voting in the negative.

The Board adjourned for one week.

ADULTERATED TEAS.

[New York Herald, May 4.]—The first seizure of teas under the law passed by the Legislature in 1881 forbidding the adulteration of food articles was made yesterday at the auction-rooms of John H. Draper & Co., of No. 87 Front street. The firm, which is exclusively an auction and commission house, and not, therefore, strictly responsible for the purity of the goods it is called upon to dispose of, had advertised to sell at public sale, beginning at noon yesterday, several thousand packages of "choice new season's teas, comprising greens, blacks, Japans, and Indias." There was a fairly good attendance of buyers and the sale opened promisingly enough. The voluble auctioneer had knocked down one lot, comprising 200 packages, and was about to proceed to the second on the list when a gentleman stepped forward from among the crowd and handed up a formidable looking paper to the salesman. That functionary glanced at the document with an expression of amazement on his face, hurriedly left his rostrum, and repaired to the private office of the firm. He did not reappear, and the auction sale of the teas was not resumed. The reasons therefor soon became known to the crowd in the place, and thence among the tea trade and down-town merchants generally.

ENJOINED.

The paper which had been served upon the auctioneer was an injunction order issued out of the Superior Court by Judge Sedgwick, on application of the Board of Health, peremptorily forbidding the sale of 3,600 packages of Pingsuey teas on the ground that they had been adulterated, and were therefore impure and unwholesome. The teas which were thus condemned were said to be the property of a Boston firm, and consisted of over 300,000 pounds.

The attention of the Health Board was called to the matter a few days ago by Mr. H. G. Meyer, editor of the Sanitary Engineer. Mr. Meyer said that he had learned from Charles G. Boardman and William McGregor, tea-dealers and experts, that the teas in question were adulterated and unfit for food. A number of samples were submitted to the Health Commissioners and referred to Prof. Chandler for analysis. The complaint was found to be correct, and the Commissioners on Wednesday decided to begin proceedings with the view of preventing the sale of the teas. Prof. Chandler yesterday morning appeared before Judge Sedgwick in the Superior Court, and on his affidavit, which was accompanied by the statements of several other experts, an injunction was granted.

EXPERT CONDEMNATION.

Prof. Chandler declared that the teas were adulterated and unfit for food. He had examined twenty-six samples of them and discovered that they were all mixed with mineral substances and were an imitation of another and a better article, and if allowed to be sold they would be distributed among the small dealers and thereby cause great injury and damage. He found the teas, he further declares, colored, coated, and powdered so as to deceive the public. Edward G. Love, Public Analyst of the State Board of Health, also deposed that a part of the Pingsuey teas which he had examined were decayed and unfit for food. Charles G. Boardman and William McGregor, tea-dealers and experts, made long statements concerning the teas, declaring in substance that blue coloring had been used and that they had been powdered with soapstone.

The health authorities, fortified with these affidavits, acted in accordance with the provisions of Chap. 407 of the Laws of 1881, entitled "An act to prevent the sale of adulterated food," and also under certain sections of the sanitary code. One section of the State law referring to teas makes it a misdemeanor to sell them "if colored, or coated, or polished, or powdered, whereby damage is concealed, or made to appear better than they really are, or of greater value." Congress at the last session passed a stringent law against the importation of adulterated teas.

THE OLD FIRST NATIONAL BANK BUILDING.

That Old Fire-Tried and Fire-Proof Structure Reconstructed—What W. E. Hale, of Hale Elevator Fame, Its Present Owner, Has Done for Its Improvement.

The history of the lot upon the southwest corner of State and Washington streets is remarkable in that Mr. W. E. Hale's recent purchase is said to be but the fourth transfer from the Government. The building, which at the time of its erection in 1867 for the First National Bank Company, was conceded by press and public to be one of the finest, most substantial, and thoroughly fire-proof in the West, was built with brick walls two feet in thickness, faced with stone, and its fire-proof qualities, taking it through the great fire almost unharmed. Upon its purchase Mr. Hale at once set about making the property valuable as a model building for wholesale and retail trade.

It is intended by the owner to add four stories to the building in the early future, and to support this additional weight the building was "screwed up," the old columns taken out, and enlarged stone piers and iron columns and girders introduced, the entire fronts taken out and iron columns substituted. As an engineering feat this is remarkable. Messrs. Hollingsworth & Coughlin, the oldest and it might be said the only firm in Chicago who have made a decided reputation in this class of work throughout the West, were the contractors for this part of the reconstruction. They have the reputation for being able to successfully raise and even move any building of any size in Chicago.

Two of Hale's passenger elevators are used. Though the building is comparatively small elevator service has become so much of a necessity that elevators are now in almost all cases duplicated. The steam-heating of the building was reconstructed so as to be used with either high or low pressure by John Davis & Co. All the painting inside and outside, as well as the calcimining, was done by S. S. Berry & Son, 260 Wabash avenue. The hardware used in the trimming of the building is of a superior grade. Yale locks are largely used and bronze nobs and butts. Messrs. Jones & Stebbins, hardware-dealers at 580 State street, are popular among builders because of the first-class order of the goods supplied, as well as for their promptness in placing them—a work that is attested by the hardware trimmings of some of our best buildings.

These improvements have given to this noted fire relic and landmark a fitting restoration and made the building so perfectly adapted to trade purposes that it yields a large revenue for the space occupied.

Prominent among the tenants is the firm of Logue & Bard, who will occupy part of the third floor, carrying a line of jewelry and watches. Mr. J. H. Logue is a prominent dealer from Peru, Ind., and Mr. A. C. Bard has been identified with the trade in Cleveland.

Fred Blauer, manufacturer of gold and silver watch-cases, occupies large and conveniently-appointed apartments upon the third floor. In this centre for the watch-case manufacturers of Chicago all but one firm in Chicago are represented, and Mr. Blauer is spoken of as a leading manufacturer in this line.

Spacious apartments have been fitted up for the practice of dentistry, and will be called the New York Dental Rooms. The operating and mechanical departments will be kept wholly distinct and under the management of skilled practitioners.

Dr. T. C. Duncan will occupy offices upon the fourth floor. Dr. E. L. Smith will be associated with him, and will also occupy these offices.

MAY MOVING.

Business Changes in Which Some Large Interests Are Represented—Something of Those Removing and Their New Quarters.

Before referring to the removals of business houses some allusion to the rapid growth of the residence districts of the South Side, due in a large degree to the rapid transit afforded by the cable-car system, seems fitting. Taking a trip south on State street to Thirty-ninth, across to Cottage Grove avenue and then down-town, one is astonished at the change that has taken place in the past three years. Vast numbers of stone and brick structures have arisen to provide homes for those who have sought the South Side as a place of residence. This progress is not surprising when the superior service of the cable-car system is considered. Its construction by the South Side City Railway Company has proven a great benefit to this section of the city, though so much objected to at first. It affords facilities to the citizens for street-car travel in Chicago never heretofore attained, and trains are now run in such numbers that the accommodations for passengers are acknowledged to be better than those of any other street-car line in the United States. The increase in travel since this system was introduced is shown by the fact that previous to its advent thirty cars on State street and thirty on Cottage Grove avenue were sufficient, while now there are in use 180 cars besides thirty grip-cars, and fifty more box-cars are in the shops in course of construction. It is pretty generally conceded that the South Side City Railway Company with its cable cars has been an important factor in increasing the value of property and building up the city along its lines, and the growing importance of Wabash avenue as a great thorough-fare for retail trade is largely due to the successful introduction of the cable-car system.

JANSEN, M'CLURG & CO.

One of the most valuable accessions to the business of Wabash avenue this spring is that of the old and honored firm of Jansen, McClurg & Co., booksellers, publishers, and stationers. The firm now occupy the spacious building Nos. 117, 119, and 121 Wabash avenue, corner of Madison street, which has been remodeled throughout for their wholesale and retail trade. The building is but a block from their former location, has splendid light, and is convenient and elegant in its appointments. The retail department occupies the main floor and a portion of the basement. A wide, easy stairway leads to the second floor, where are the principal offices of the firm and samples of their extensive variety of goods for the trade, conveniently and attractively displayed. In addition to the many popular books of which this firm are the publishers, their comprehensive stock includes all that is desirable in American and foreign books and stationery. The engraving of this firm is of superior excellence, as is their entire stock. Any one desiring books, stationery, wedding-cards, invitations, etc., of the best quality will do well to consult Jansen, McClurg & Co.

THE NIAGARA FIRE-INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Among the changes in location which have occurred this spring it is noticed that the Niagara Fire-Insurance Company have removed their Western headquarters from No. 155 La Salle street to the new and commodious business block on the southeast corner of La Salle and Monroe streets. The move was a judicious one, for the company has now planted itself in a locality which the new Board of Trade Building, now in process of erection, will presently transform into the very business centre of Chicago.

The moment is opportune to say a word concerning this stanch corporation. It was organized in 1850, and from the start took its place in the front rank of the leading institutions of like character in the country. The confidence which it immediately gained has never been forfieted or impaired and its business connections have rapidly extended with each succeeding year.

Its last annual statement showed that its assets were $1,780,493.35; net surplus, $536,858.32. These figures tell their own story and require no comment.

The principal officers are: President, Peter Notman; Secretary, Thomas F. Goodrich; Manager of Western Department, I. S. Blackwelder.

F. P. ELLIOTT & CO.

Among the instances which may be cited as an example of the progress we are steadily making is the removal of the above firm to their elegant new warehouse, Nos. 208-210 East Randolph street. The building is five stories and basement in hight, and covers an area of 40x155 feet, with a basement 40x200 feet, and has a storage room aggregating 39,000 square feet. The stock rooms are fitted up with all the best appurtenances for the display of stock, and a most desirable feature is the splendid light which radiates to every nook in the rooms. This firm have been established in this city for over twenty-six years, and, as they are now well settled in their new quarters, with better facilities than ever before for filling the wants of their customers, they will, no doubt, enjoy the large increase of trade they certainly merit.

CAMPBELL & LILL SUPPLY COMPANY.

This firm, who are old-established and well-known manufacturers and dealers in railway and machinists' supplies, have removed from the building they occupied for the last three years, at No. 228 Lake street, to more commodious quarters on the opposit side of the street, No. 237. In the fitting up of their new place Messrs. Campbell & Lill seem to have been in full sympathy with modern thought and progress, showing in the complete arrangement and the employment of the newest and best auxiliaries a desire to make their facilities adequate to the increased demand for their own manufactures, and also to materially better their means for supplying their customers with the products of the prominent Eastern manufacturers for whom they are the Western agents.

GWYNNE & DAY.

The quarters formerly occupied in the Grannis Block by H. J. Christoph have been fitted up and occupied by the well-known firm of Gwynne & Day, bankers and brokers. These enlarged quarters will give this firm extra facilities for the transaction of their increasing business in stocks, investments, securities, etc.

SPALDING, MITCHELL & CO.

This firm are well known shippers and dealers in anthracite and smelting coal, and the only firm in the city who deal exclusively in all rail shipments. They have just removed from their old location to new and commodious offices at 53 Dearborn street.

manufacturers of Bradley's insulated air coverings for boilers, steam, gas, and water pipes, have moved to new and larger quarters, 78 and 80 Lake street, and have fitted up with new and improved machinery.

H. A. ALLYN & CO.,

metallic shingles and sidings, plumbing goods, brass pumps, etc., have moved from No. 130 to No. 137 Lake street. Their new quarters are almost opposite their old location, and offer better facilities for the demands of their business.

D. J. M'NAMARA,

No. 283 East Madison street, will hereafter devote his entire attention to manufacturing sample and theatrical trunks, having closed his retail business.

OTHER REMOVALS.

J. M. Lauf, the merchant tailor, for five years at 140 22d-st., is now located at 2133 Wabash-av., where he will be pleased to see his patrons.

The retail department of the celebrated Adams & Westlake oil stoves is now located at 94 State street, opposite Marshall Field & Co.'s retail store.

J. G. Langguth, the optician, is now permanently located at 133 and 135 Wabash avenue, first door south of Madison street.

T. C. Duncan, M. D., one of our leading homeopathic physicians, has removed his office to 102 State street, corner Washington. Hours from 11 a. m. to 3 p. m.

Chas. Bodach, manufacturer of show-cases, has moved to 56 State street.

WORLD'S Hair Restorer
IS PERFECTION!

Public Benefactress. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN has justly earned this title, and thousands are this day rejoicing over a fine head of hair produced by her unequaled preparation for restoring, invigorating, and beautifying the Hair. Her World's Hair Restorer quickly cleanses the scalp, removing Dandruff, and arrests the fall; the hair, if gray, is changed to its natural color, giving it the same vitality and luxurious quantity as in youth.

COMPLIMENTARY. "My hair is now restored to its youthful color; I have not a gray hair left. I am satisfied that the preparation is not a dye, but acts on the secretions. My hair ceases to fall, which is certainly an advantage to me, who was in danger of becoming bald." This is the testimony of all who use MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.

"One Bottle did it." That is the expression of many who have had their gray hair restored to its natural color, and their bald spot covered with hair, after using one bottle of MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. It is not a dye.

MASSES FOR THE SOUL.

A Bequest for That Purpose Sustained by Judge Tuley.

Decisions of English Courts as to "Superstitious Uses" Not Binding Here.

An interesting opinion on the legality of a devise by a testator of money to be used in masses for his soul was delivered yesterday morning by Judge Tuley in the case of Richard L. Kehoe against Michael Kehoe and others. This was a bill to obtain the instruction of the court as to complainant's duty as trustee in reference to certain funds remaining in his possession. John W. Kehoe, a few weeks before his death, made a deed to complainant of certain personal property on oral directions or trusts, which were in substance that the funds should be devoted to procuring masses to be said for the soul of the grantor, J. W. Kehoe, and for the soul of his mother. The complainant averred his willingness to carry out the wishes of the donor, but the defendants, the heirs-at-law of the deceased, objected, claiming the trust was void because it was not wholly in writing, and also because the funds were given for a superstitious use or purpose. The statute of frauds was relied on to sustain the first objection, but, as that statute did not embrace trusts as to personal property, but only as to realty, the point was not well taken.

THE ENGLISH LEGISLATION.

As to the second point it was contended that, as the Illinois statute had adopted the common law and statutes of England prior to the fourth year of James I., excepting certain specified statutes concerning usury and frivolous suits, the decisions of the English courts based on the statute of Edward VI., holding that gifts or devises for procuring masses, etc., were void, as being for superstitious uses, would be followed by the courts of this country. The American decisions were conflicting, and no courts of last resort had passed on the question.

The doctrine of superstitious uses originated in two English statute passed about the period of the Reformation concerning the disposition of property for uses then considered superstitious. The first was that of 23 Henry VIII., A. D. 1532, which was about four years after the clergy had acknowledged Henry VIII. to be the supreme head on earth of the church, and it provided that all uses thereafter declared of land, except certain leaseholds, to the intent to have perpetual or the continual service of a priest or other like uses, should be void. The second act of 1 Ed. VI., Chap. 14, A. D. 1547, declared the King entitled to all real and certain specified personal property theretofore disposed of for the perpetual finding of a priest, or maintenance of any anniversary, or obit, or other like thing, or any light or lamp at any church or chapel. Those statutes were passed at a very troubled period of English history in religious matters. Henry VIII. had just severed the connection between the English church and the Pope at Rome and had invited to the kingly power that of the head of the church. While those two statutes were aimed at the practices of the Catholic Church, yet the Catholic and Non-Conformist were equally persecuted, not only by religious edicts, but by all the power Parliament could exercise in favor of the newly-established church. But neither of the statutes made dispositions of personal property to such uses void. The English Chancellors, however, many of whom were ecclesiastics, and the English Judges, who were always adherents of the Established Church, easily found in the absence of any express statute what they termed "a public policy," or "a policy of the law," which enabled them to declare absolutely void all dispositions of property, whether real or personal, given or devised for the uses specified in the two statutes, or for uses which they deemed to come within the spirit of the statutes, such as "legacies to priests to pray for the soul of the donor," or "for the bringing up of poor children in the Roman Catholic faith," etc.

When Judges undertook to decide cases, not upon the law, but on what they considered public policy or the policy of the law, they stood on slippery ground and showed strange inconsistency. One Vice-Chancellor, for instance, on the ground of public policy, held a devise for the purpose of aiding in the publication and circulation of "Baxter's Call to the Unconverted" to be void because for a superstitious use, while Lord Romilly held, upon the like ground of public policy, that a trust for propagating the sacred writings of Joanna Southcote valid and not for a superstitious use, notwithstanding those writings averred that Joanna Southcote was with child by the Holy Ghost. The Irish Chancery Courts, uninfluenced by any consideration of a public policy to oppose Catholicism, had held in two cases devises of personal property to procure masses to be said for the soul of the donor to be valid.

ADOPTION OF THE COMMON LAW IN AMERICA.

The history of the American statute adopting the common law and statutes of England and the history of the United States at the time of its adoption should also be considered in determining whether or not the statutes of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. ever became a part of the law in this country; and, if they did, whether or not the decisions of the English courts as to superstitious uses should be followed in the United States. In 1776, when the people of Virginia assembled in a convention to sever the relations that bound them to the mother country, the celebrated Bill of Rights and Constitution of the Commonwealth was adopted. The convention also passed a resolution adopting the common law and statutes of England prior to 4 James I. The reason why that date was fixed on was probably because the first permanent settlement at Jamestown was made in that year, the theory being that the colonists brought with them the common law and statutes as they then existed. Though the Established Church of England was by law that of Virginia from its earliest colonial days, the same convention of 1776 also adopted a provision in bill of rights, "that all men all equally entitled to the free exercise of religion according to the dictates of conscience, and that it is the mutual duty of all to practice Christian forbearance, love, and charity toward each other." The war for independence was then raging. Catholic Maryland and Episcopal Virginia were fighting side by side, and it was the sentiment and policy of the country to favor absolute freedom in religion. The Virginia statute was first adopted by the Territory of Indiana in 1807, which then embraced what are now the States of Illinois and Wisconsin. The Northwestern Territory was largely settled by Virginia people, and that fact was probably the reason why the Virginia statute was adopted. Illinois was then almost a wilderness, and the statutes of Henry and Edward would have no applicability. The present statute was adopted by Illinois in 1819.

THE BEQUESTS VALID.

Even admitting that the above statutes of Henry and Edward did become by adoption a part of the Illinois law, yet it must be conceded, considering the history of the statute adopting the statutes of England, and of contemporaneous events in Virginia and Illinois at the time of its passage, that neither Virginia nor Illinois intended to adopt the doctrine of the English courts as to superstitious uses as a part of their laws. The question being freed from the force of precedents must be decided upon principles. In the United States, where no discrimination was made in law between the professions of any particular religious creed, where there was an absolutely free toleration of all religious opinions and modes of worship, no such thing as a superstitious use could be said to exist. Who was to decide whether a use was superstitious? Who could penetrate the life beyond and say there was no purgatory? The question was not as to whether the doctrine of a purgatory was well or ill founded. It was a well-established doctrine of the Catholic Church that there was a purgatory, and that masses for the soul were efficacious. That being the donor's belief, why should not his desires be carried out? It was a maxim of the law that a man might do what he wished with his own, provided he did not violate the law in so doing, nor devote his property to an immoral purpose. A person might gratify any whim or caprice, religious or irreligious, that he desired. With the wisdom of his act the law had no concern. The Legislature had not declared such a disposition of property illegal. Neither the Legislature nor the courts had the power to declare that any religious use was a superstitious use. In the United States there was a legal equality of all sects; all were equally orthodox. To discriminate, and say what should be considered a pious use, and what a superstitious use, would be to infringe on the constitutional guarantee of perfect freedom and equality of all religions. The right of a person to devote his property to any purpose which he believed to be a religious purpose was just as necessary to the religious liberty guaranteed by the Constitution as was the right to believe and worship according to the dictates of one's own conscience. The wish of the donor must be followed, and the funds appropriated to the procuring of masses to be said in accordance with his instructions.

HUMANE SOCIETY.

The Illinois Humane Society held its annual meeting yesterday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in Club-Room No. 4 of the Grand Pacific. Among those present were John G. Shortall, Ferd. W. Peck, H. L. Frank, E. L. Brown, N. H. Paaren, A. W. Landon, H. N. Hart, M. E. Servoss, O. J. Stough, John Myers, J. C. Dore, P. McGrath, M. M. Graves, George Schneider, D. B. Fisk, A. D. Titsworth, Miss A. E. Stone, Mrs. A. F. Blaiu, Mrs. C. M. Fairchild, and Messrs. Dudley and Mitchell.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT.

Mr. J. G. Shortall presided, and Mrs. Fairchild acted as Secretary. The President read his annual report, in which he congratulated the society upon the good work that it was doing and its increased usefulness in the field of education. Collections for the funds of the society were made with much labor by the members of the Board of Directors. These collections were generally gathered from business-men and friends of the society, who were approached for aid in a gentlemanly manner at all times. The President said that he hoped the day was not far distant when the society would find it unnecessary to solicit aid from the much-beset merchants and business-men of the city. He expressed a hope that wealthy benevolent citizens would realize the worthiness of the society and honor it with bequests. He had been notified by the attorney of the late Mrs. Lucy Warner that she had bequeathed the sum of $500 to the society. He regretted to report that the committee appointed to wait upon the City Council and ask for an appropriation of the percentage of the fines collected through the instrumentality of the Humane Society did not succeed in its mission, as the Council decided that it had no power to act in the premises, unless empowered to do so by a special act of the Legislature.

The President estimates the value of property in the way of horses and cattle saved from death by the society's ambulance at $20,000. But this ambulance, while it does a vast amount of good, is at the same time a source of great expense to the society, as it costs not less than $2 to send it to the relief of some unfortunate animal.

The Humane Journal, the official organ of the association, is reported as doing good work in its sphere, and a generous support for it is asked from every one interested in the welfare of the society and of humanity.

In referring to the treatment of cattle at the Union Stock-Yards by drovers and others, Mr. Shortall said that the parties interested in the care of cattle in that vicinity were becoming very careless in observing the law governing the treatment of animals, and he hoped that before long the society would be strong enough to bring these men to their senses, as it had done before.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

Number of cases investigated (a "case" frequently representing two or three horses and as many men), 1,626; prosecutions for cruelty to animals, 116; prosecutions for cruelty to children, 50; total number of prosecutions, 166; dismissals, 67; number of children looked after during the year and conditions remedied, 955; number of children surrendered to charitable institutions, 121. The institutions that received the homeless and destitute children are: The Home of the Friendless, St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum, the Christian Brothers' Reform School, Servite Sisters' Protectory, Foundlings' Home, House of the Good Shepherd, Uhlric's Orphan Asylum, German Catholic Orphan Asylum, the Half-Orphan Asylum, Protestant Orphan Asylum, Polish Orphan Asylum, and the Evanston Industrial School for Girls. Many children have been found good homes with responsible parties in the country.

The Treasurer's report was submitted by Mr. Edwin Lee Brown. The total amount of receipts during the last year is $6,018; total amount paid out, $5,965; balance on hand, $53.

OFFICERS ELECTED.

The following ladies and gentlemen were elected members of the Board of Directors: Edwin Lee Brown, John C. Dore, John G. Shortall, John B. Sherman, P. D. Armour, Joseph Stockton, Ferd W. Peck, D. B. Fisk, Marshall Field, H. L. Frank, O. J. Stough, George E. Adams, T. W. Harvey, Prof. David Swing, Henry N. Hart, Christian Wahl, Albert W. London, Mrs. James M. Walker, Mrs. Ferd Peck, Mrs. F. H. Beckwith, Miss Elizabeth Stone, M. D. Wells, Thomas E. Hull, H. H. Shufeldt, Wirt Dexter, B. P. Moulton, B. F. Culver, George Schneider, Mrs. W. G. Hibbard, Elmer Washburn.

Mrs. Fairchild asked that the society would relieve her of the office of Secretary, as the duties were becoming too numerous and severe for her. Her request was complied with after a formal recognition of her past services by the Board of Directors.

The following gentlemen were elected officers for the present year: President, John G. Shortall; First Vice-President, Joseph Stockton; Second Vice-President, Henry N. Hart; Secretary, B. F. Culver; Treasurer, George Schneider. The following gentlemen comprise the Executive Committee: Messrs. Ferd W. Peck, H. L. Frank, E. L. Brown, B. P. Moulton, O. J. Stough, J. G. Shortall, Joseph Stockton, J. C. Dore, and George Schneider.

CANADA.

They Hardly Deserve to Have a Real Princess Among Them Evidently.

[Toronto World.]—It is astonishing the way the little extravagances at Rideau Hall, for which the long suffering and patient country has to pay, crop up. Like weeds, they are everywhere, but particularly do they affect the holes and corners where they are least likely to be unearthed. The latest discoveries have been made in a case now under consideration by the exchequer court at Ottawa in which McLean, Rogers & Co., the Queen's printers, are the plaintiffs. Evidence was required of the nature of some of the work done. Then it came out that not only were the entertainments for which Lord Dufferin gained so much credit paid by the Government, but even the minutest expenses had to come from the well-filched purse of the country. The theatrical programs, the ball-room and dinner cards, had to be beautifully engraved and embossed, and if Canadian artists were not equal to the esthetic taste of the noble alleged hosts, the aid of Messrs. Tiffany & Co. of New York was sought, and, of course, had to be paid for at fancy prices. But, as if this was not imposition enough, the country was made to pay for the birth notice of a sister-in-law of Lord Dufferin—Mrs. Stephenson—a newspaper puff to the doctor who presided at that interesting event, several dozen copies of the newspaper containing the puff, and an advertisement for a wet nurse. As a contemporary remarks: "One would suppose that, with an income of $50,000 a year, a free house, light, fuel, and attendance, and about $10,000 for traveling expenses, a Governor-General would not sponge on the country for his bills of fare and the etceteras of domestic accidents."

MONTREAL, Que., May 4.—[Special.]—Quite a sensation was caused in the crowded court-room today during the election trial of the Hon. Mr. Mousseau, Premier of this Province, for bribery and corruption at the late election. A hotelkeeper named Leger, of Lachine, had given some very damaging evidence regarding the remission of liquor fines upon him by the local government, when the defendant's counsel stated that Mr. Mousseau had resigned his seat and given up the contest. It had been felt all along by his friends that he was in a tight place. Efforts were put forth to induce the prosecution to withdraw the case. It is said here tonight that Mr. Mousseau has retired from the Premiership and that Mr. Taillon, the present Speaker of the House, has been called to form a Cabinet. It is said also that Mr. Mousseau will get his reward by being appointed to the vacant Judgeship here.

Wooing Back the French Canadians.

OTTAWA, Ont., May 4.—In moving for a statement in Parliament last night showing all the sums of money expended since 1875 to secure the repatriation of French Canadians who have emigrated to the United States, Mr. Tasse stated that it was done with a view to regaining to Canada thousands of French Canadians who have sought in less favorable times employment in the neighboring Republic. There are at present, it is estimated, 300,000 French Canadians in the United States, and the subject of repatriation has on more than one occasion engaged the attention of Parliament. The protective policy introduced by the present Administration, it is held, has done more to accomplish this end than any other legislative act yet introduced in giving employment to all who may wish to return to their native country. In 1881 10,000 Canadians returned from the United States, and in 1882 20,000. On behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, Sir Hector Langevin promised that the matter should receive the further consideration of the Government.

AMERICAN SOCIETY.

The Week's Events in the First Families of Chicago, New York, and Washington.

In Chicago.

The week was brilliantly inaugurated in a social way Monday evening by the formal reception given by the Calumet Club signalizing the opening of their elegant new house, corner of Michigan avenue and Twentieth street. An extended account of the affair was given in THE TRIBUNE of Tuesday, and it is sufficient to say that it was a brilliant social success, participated in by the best people in the city. The same evening Miss Grace A. Hall, of No. 2141 Calumet avenue, and Mr. Ward L. Jennings, of Lapeer, Mich., were married at the residence of the bride's mother, the Rev. G. C. Lorimer officiating. Miss Pauline Weishaar, the organist of St. Patrick's Church, and Austin J. Doyle, Chief of Police, were united in marriage Monday evening by the Rev. Father Burke. Miss Della Campbell, daughter of C. C. Campbell, and Mr. Luther C. Streeter were married the same evening at the residence of the bride's parents, Grant Park, by the Rev. George K. Hoover. At the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. William N. Kerr, No. 330 Warren avenue, Monday, at 8 a. m., Mrs. Laura N. Getchell, daughter of Judge Miller, of Iowa, and niece of the Rev. Dr. Emery Miller, and Mr. Edward W. Eldridge were united in marriage by the Rev H. W. Thomas. The same evening Miss Lulia Milner, of No. 1421 Michigan avenue, was given a surprise party, it being her 18th birthday.

The C. O. D. Society of the First Presbyterian Church gave an enjoyable musical and literary entertainment in the church parlors Tuesday evening.

A May breakfast is generally eaten under circumstances not conducive to appetite or to serenity of mind. But when it is served in a handsome suite of parlors decorated with trailing arbutus, cowslips, and moss, and here and there bright daffodils, with a group of ladies in handsome spring toilets, and a feast fit for the gods, it is a far different affair. Such a breakfast was given May morning by Mrs. J. W. Ela, of the Woodruff House, to forty of her lady friends. This dainty meal was superintended by Mrs. W. Boardman. Before the ladies separated "Daffy-Down-Dilly" was presented in charming guise by Mrs. Col. Parker, who read Mrs. Whitney's pretty poem of that name in an artistic manner. Among the ladies present were Mrs. Wirt Dexter, Mrs. Dr. Johnson, Mrs. H. O. Stone, Mrs. Runnion, Mrs. S. S. Bliss, Mrs. Dr. Jackson, Mrs. Dr. Gilman Smith, Mrs. S. S. Griggs, Mrs. John Root, Miss Hattie Monroe, Miss Griggs, Miss Flora Johnson, Miss Kelley, Mrs. Upton, and Miss Florence Fuller.

The young people of the Church of the Ascension gave a musical and literary entertainment in Martine's Hall last Wednesday evening, and the affair was quite successful.

The Illinois Art Association give an exhibition of works of art in black and white at the Illinois Club Thursday evening, and the same evening Mr. D. H. McDaneld, of No. 204 Dearborn avenue, was agreeably surprised by a number of his friends.

Mrs. S. H. Sweet, of No. 2940 Prairie avenue, gave an enjoyable children's party Friday evening, entertaining about 130 little people.

The promise of gayety for the coming week is small. Thursday the Farragut Boat Club gives a dramatic entertainment in the Arcade Theatre at Pullman. The annual reception given by the Calumet Club to the old settlers of Chicago takes place May 17. Miss Annie Cheney, daughter of W. W. Cheney, Esq., and granddaughter of Philo Carpenter, and Mr. Charles H. Solomon, of this city, son of William Solomon, Esq., of Boston, will be quietly married June 7 at No. 436 West Washington street.

New York.

Very few of the well-known dinner entertainers of New York move now except in a steamer bound for Europe, where the London season has just commenced. Mrs. Paran Stevens departed some days ago, and the shutters of her hospitable house are closed. Mrs. Brockholst Cutting and Mr. and Mrs. Beadley Martin go on Wednesday next. Mrs. and Miss Hoffman and Mr. and Mrs. Rhinelander and family are already gone, and the outgoing steamers are all loaded to the water's edge. Some voyagers, however, have come this way. Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Bell Jr. and their children have returned from Europe, and the people who are to stay at home are sufficient in number to make New York still an attractive place. Mrs. Adrian Iselin gave a large dinner Monday; Miss White and Mrs. Scriven gave ladies' lunches. Mrs. Banks gave a large lunch to twenty ladies Wednesday, in honor of her daughter, Mrs. Robert Gardiner Thompson. Tuesday evening there was a gay assemblage in Park avenue, at the handsome house of Mrs. Jonathan Sturgis, to see the pretty little piece "Place aux Dames," in which Miss Sharpless, the Misses Van Buren, and Miss Laurence played very neatly. Tuesday Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt gave a dinner; Thursday Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt gave a large dinner. The financial results of "The Princess" were greater than the committee expected. In spite of heavy expenses the ladies will return something over $3,000 to the Bartholdi fund.

The event of the week has been the somewhat sudden announcement of the engagement of Mr. Howard Potter to his cousin Miss Ethel Potter. The cousins will be married Wednesday next and sail for Europe Thursday. Friday Mrs. J. Fred Pierson gave a large and handsome dinner in honor of her sister, Mrs. Corbin, of Paris. Mr. and Mrs. Corbin, who have been spending the winter on their plantation in Georgia, will sail for Europe Wednesday. For the coming fortnight several weddings are announced, in spite of the prejudice against being married in the month of May. Miss Condit wishes her friends to be present at Trinity Chapel May 17 to witness the marriage of her niece, May Agnes Condit, who is to be married to Mr. Randolph Hurry in Trinity Chapel. Wednesday of this week Mr Alfred Pierpont Morewood and Miss Hopkins will be married. Mr. Harry Lander and Miss Lester will be married May 15 at St. Bartholomew's. The attractive invitations to country houses begin to be talked about. A luncheon or tea following a drive out to Astoria, Morrisiana, Hoboken, Brooklyn, or up the Hudson is a feature of the spring which this variable climate sometimes allows one to enjoy.

Two deaths have startled the world of society during the week. The first, a grievous loss to her family and the world, was that of Mrs. Alexandre, one of the beautiful Jerome sisters, nieces of Leonard and Lawrence Jerome. She died suddenly, and left all that this world holds dear behind her. The other death was that of Louis Carre Hamersley, the well-known rich young man whose devotion to his father was so often the theme of remark. The bond between the two men seemed to be of no common kind. The son seemingly could not live without the father, and has followed him very quickly to the other world. Mr. Hamersley leaves a beautiful young widow.

And now are coming the hunting and garden parties, and the dog-show and the coaching club parade, and the new bonnets and the dresses for Newport. It has not been good hunting weather so far, the atmospheric influences being depressing. So are the new bonnets of the gypsy type. These immense pokes "a la directoire," need a very high arrangement of hair to fill them out. When tied atop of a Grecian knot they are absurd.

The freak of dying the hair seems to be coming back. A young lady dies her hair bronze, then ties on a waving mat of golden tow. Every one who can command cart, carriage, victoria, phaeton, tilbury, or hack now drives in the park every afternoon. The rumor again prevails that the Princess Louise will be here during May or June. Her royal Highness would receive a warm welcome, and a grand ball might be given to her without fear of dynamite. The summer prospects of Newport are very attractive. President Arthur will be the guest, it is said, of Mr. Beckwith, for a fortnight.

The fine villa and grounds of ex-Gov. Morgan were sold last week for $80,000. Gen. Robert Wilson, father of Mrs. Ogden, was the purchaser. Lady Mandeville does not take Mr. Bennett's house, as reported. Already some cards are issued for June receptions. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Grant Thompson will receive at the Kensington on June 7 and 14. There are other rumors which point somewhat to the formation of a spring season in New York. It is a curious fact that the finest season is not utilized in this city.

Washington.

Society circles have been extremely dull during the past week, and, beyond one or two minor wedding-parties and a dinner or two, Mrs. Grundy has had nothing to talk about. But few of the society people remain. The extreme warm weather has driven them to the colder towns of the North and West. The rush from Florida and other Southern winter resorts has about ceased, and the summer dullness seems to have set in in earnest.

In honor of Gen. and Mrs. Foster, who are about to take up their residence at Madrid, a farewell dinner was given last evening by Mr. John G. Thompson. The affair was very elegant, and but few guests were present. They were: Chief Justice and Mrs. Waite, Secretary and Mrs. Chandler, Gen. and Mrs. John W. Foster, Commissioner West, the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Bartlett, Judge and Mrs. Shellabarger, and Mrs. McFearson.

A very pleasant soirée musicale was given Thursday at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. Randolph. Among those present were: Miss Leavitt, of Boston; Messrs. T. M. Mallard, of New York; Joseph Fleicher, of Chicago; Miss Mount, of New York; Dr. and Mrs. Charles W. Sonnenschmidt, Mr. and Mrs. Huck, Messrs. Asa L. Carrier, and Elmer Carrier.

Mrs. Gresham, wife of the Postmaster-General, arrived at the Arlington yesterday. They will, in a few days, take possession of the house of Gen. J. W. Foster, 1405 I street, which they have leased, and in which they will reside in the future. Postmaster-General Gresham still continues the recipient of many social honors. Last evening a dinner was given by Mr. Justice Woods in his honor, at which were many gentlemen prominent in social and official life.

Secretary Chandler left today for his home in New Hampshire. He went to attend the bedside of his mother, who is reported to be quite seriously ill.

Gen. Sherman and staff will, Tuesday next, visit Fortress Monroe for the purpose of inspecting the artillery school there. The President may accompany the party, in which event a naval review will be held at Hampton Roads.

United States Trust Company, of New York, Trustee.

TOTAL ISSUE AUTHORIZED, $50,000,000, ON THE DOUBLE TRACK MAIN LINE BETWEEN THE CITY OF NEW YORK AND THE CITY OF BUFFALO AND ITS BRANCHES

Having purchased $20,262,000 in all of the above described bonds, of which $16,145,000 have already been privately sold, we now invite proposals to purchase the remaining $4,117,000 upon the following terms:

Sealed proposals, to be indorsed "Proposals for West Shore bonds," will be received at our office until Thursday, May 10, 1883, at 3 o'clock p. m., when they will be opened, in the presence of the bidders, by

JOHN A. STEWART, President,
United States Trust Company,
F. N. LAWRENCE, President,
New York Stock Exchange, and
H. F. SPAULDING, President,
Central Trust Company,

and will be awarded to the highest bidders, absolutely without reserve.

Proposals must be accompanied by certified cheques for 10 per cent of the value of the Bonds bid for, which amount will be applied to the extent of 10 per cent upon proposals accepted, or will be returned in full where no awards are made. The remaining 90 per cent of the Bonds must be paid for in three successive monthly installments of 30 per cent each, commencing June 14, 1883. Purchasers have the privilege of anticipating at any time any or all installments upon giving three days' notice thereof. Interest accrued upon the bonds to date of payment therefor must be paid in all cases.

For the first payment of 10 per cent, negotiable receipts will be issued, redeemable in bonds upon full payment for the amount awarded. Bonds will be delivered for all other installments [illegible].

The officials of the West Shore Railway inform us that their road from Weehawken to Syracuse is now nearly ready for the passage of trains, and that the cash assets for the completion of those divisions are ample to place them in first-class condition for full operation. They also state that the road between Syracuse and Buffalo is under contract for completion before Aug. 31, 1883, and that ample funds are provided therefor. They further state that they expect to open the road for business from New York to Albany and Syracuse in July, and through to Buffalo in October.

The New York, West Shore and Buffalo Railway is the only trunk line terminating at New York City which has but one class of bonds of a single issue, secured by a uniform first mortgage covering its entire line and equipment.

By reason of the fifty years given before these Bonds can be redeemed, the convenience of registered certificates of large denominations upon which the interest may be collected by cheque the same as upon Government Bonds, and being the security of a First Mortgage on a Trunk Line traversing the most populous and wealthy portion of the United States, and terminating at its Commercial Metropolis, it is believed that these Bonds will become a favorite American railway investment for trust and other funds requiring permanency, convenience, and safety.

ON 'CHANGE.

A Panic in Corn—The Bears Have a Slight Advantage.

The bears on 'Change got their work in slightly yesterday, and wheat declined to $1.16. The bulls relaxed sufficiently to buy in enormously, and the volume of transactions was a repetition of the two preceding days. There is said to be eight times more wheat sold each day than there is in the city, and during the last week fully 6,000 per cent more wheat changed hands than there was here to be sold. Samuel W. Allerton says that dealing in futures is the forerunner of civilization, and he can prove it before any investigating committee in existence. Every one deals in futures, he says, from infancy, and the rule holds true in wheat. If the Investigating Committee doesn't subpœna him he threatens to hire a hall. He arrived in his bear tour at Monticello, in his own Piatt County, yesterday, and telegraphed to John T. Lester & Co. as follows:

> There are 300 acres of wheat on the old farm in the best possible condition. I look for as good a crop as I have had for twenty years. Other farms average well. The only unhappy man I have seen is from Morrisonville. He says he plowed up his wheat because the newspapers said it was dead. Now his neighbors have good crops, and he could kick himself.

COMPARATIVE PRICES.

The illustration of the man who could kick himself if his anatomy permitted doesn't go down. He had better have raised a poor crop than none, say the bulls, as even poor crops will pay this season. The following are the highest and lowest prices of wheat May 5 in other years:

1868	$2.10 2.12½	1876	$ 97¼ 98½
1869	1.12⅝ 1.13⅜	1877	1.72 1.76¼
1870	89 91¼	1878	Sunday
1871	1.26½ 1.28	1879	91¼ 92⅞
1872	Sunday	1880	1.14¾ 1.16
1873	1.24½ 1.25	1881	1.02¼ 1.02⅞
1874	1.24⅞ 1.27	1882	1.26⅞ 1.27⅞

IN CORN.

There was a panic in corn. The posting of rejected corn on the board frightened a good many longs into unloading. For the first half hour the panic was visible. Shorts, however, took occasion to absorb the offerings, and the market rallied about three-eighths of a cent. It closed at the lowest price of the day. This posting of corn may not amount to much, but it will cause uneasiness among holders, and will probably cause further unloading, particularly if there should be a spell of hot weather. Advices from Iowa were that corn was rapidly being planted and that oats were well up, looking finely. Some bulls were advising customers to go slow last night on the long side. Shorts on all grain are advised to cover Monday. The receipts of corn are expected to be large from the 10th to the 15th. Bears are confident that corn will decline to 50 cents, when the country will unload. The prices are still 10 per cent above the average for ten years.

Tomorrow morning the Board of Trade session will not begin until 10:30. This arrangement will be in vogue Monday mornings during the summer months.

The wiseacres claim to have scented a corner in rye, and charge that Mr. McGeoch, as usual, is in with the wickedness, while Mr. Leopold Bloom, it is said, will be the indirect beneficiary.

Some rejected corn belonging to Fleming & Boyden in Dickinson's elevator was reported in a heating condition. The owners have agreed to remove it. As far as could be ascertained there was no other corn in store here in that condition, neither rejected nor No. 2, but the scare had considerable effect both here and in New York.

The estate of B. F. Murphey, deceased, and Austin Gunnison ask for permission to transfer memberships. William Reynolds and Morris P. Borden make application for membership.

DOCTORED TEA.

Efforts to Secure a Purer Article.

NEW YORK, May 4.—[Special.]—An unusual degree of interest has been aroused among members of the tea trade in this city by the recent practical efforts to stop the importation and sale of adulterated teas. The injunction served on John H. Draper & Co., the tea auctioneers of No. 85 Front street, yesterday, stopping the sale of 3,563 packages of Pingsuey teas, was the principal topic of conversation among the merchants today. Many dealers in teas say that the Pingsuey teas have been deteriorating steadily during the last ten or twelve years. The system of "doctoring" this brand of tea in Shanghai has grown so disreputable that an immense amount of unwholesome stuff is shipped to the United States and other countries each year. Other dealers declare that Pingsuey teas are no worse than many of the coarse grades of teas. Much stress is laid on the fact that the Pingsuey teas have been selling in the New York market for a great many years without any complaints being made against them. Cable advices indicate that the quantity of tea which will be brought to the United States this year will be about 18,000,000 pounds, and it is estimated that at least one-third of that will be Pingsuey tea. Mr. James R. Davies, the United States examiner of teas at the Port of New York, acting under the law passed by the last Congress, condemned fifty-five packages of black tea brought here from London by the steamship St. Romain a few days ago. An arbitration committee was appointed to determine as to the quality of the importation, and they reported to Collector Robertson today that they had found the fifty-five packages of teas to be "adulterated with spurious and exhausted leaves." Mr. Davies said today that it was safe to estimate that 20 per cent of the green teas imported into this country are adulterated. The law under which he acts exempts from its provisions all teas that had been shipped to this country prior to March 2. He expects that the steamship Strathleven, which will arrive here from the tea ports in a week or ten days, will contain some teas which were loaded since March 2, and therefore will demand his attention. Mr. Davies stated that the materials used by the Chinese tea "doctors" at Shanghai in coloring, coating, and polishing the Pingsuey teas were China clay, gypsum, Russian blue, and other mineral substances.

DUTIABLE GOODS.

The following dutiable goods were received at the Custom-House yesterday: John C. Olsen & Co., 1 case woolens; Judson & Co., 1 case curtains; L. Manasse, 1 case optical goods; C. J. Barnes, 2 hogsheads wine; J. & E. Jaeger, 32 packages earthenware; Marshall Field & Co., 21 cases cottons; C. P. Kimball & Co., 1 case saddlery; Burley & Tyrrell, 32 packages earthenware; Eliel, Kollenberg & Hiller, 78 bales leaf tobacco; Wilson Bros., 14 cases hosiery; W. E. Burlock & Co., 1 case suspenders. Collections, $11,129.

Affections of the liver, bilious disorders, sick headache, etc., are thoroughly cured by Dr. Jayne's Sanative Pills. Acting as a general laxative, they remove all irritating and fecal matter from the bowels, gradually change the vitiated secretions of the stomach and liver, and restore these organs to a healthy condition.

BUSINESS.

The Local Money Market Active and Easy—Heavy Bank Clearings Last Week.

Stocks Dull in Spite of the Vanderbilt Changes, with Less Steadiness.

FINANCIAL.

The local money market was active on Saturday, especially in discounts, the applications being from all classes of borrowers. The offerings of loanable funds continue liberal, and the market is easy at 6@7 per cent, the inside being the common rate. Country orders for money continue small and promise to be so for some time.

Exchange on New York was firmer Saturday, selling at 75c premium per $1,000.

Date.	Clearings.	Balances.
Tuesday	12,635,964.22	1,924,167.68
Wednesday	28,558,224.44	1,724,639.19
Thursday	10,525,302.71	1,693,585.52
Friday	9,834,054.48	1,489,020.07
Saturday	8,494,211.38	1,200,855.79
Total	$72,899,175.76	$8,876,807.37
Correspond'g week last year	61,411,885.51	7,169,093.06

This is an increase of nearly 18¾ per cent; a very gratifying exhibit, especially when compared with the totals for April, which were as follows:

1883	188,001,655
1882	184,785,507

The latest addition to the banking capital of Chicago has been made by the Union National Bank, which on the 2d of this month, has increased its paid-up capital of $1,000,000. The additional stock has all been taken and fully paid in by the old shareholders, to whom it has been issued at par in amounts equal to their present holdings. The bank has now with its surplus and accumulated earnings an actual cash capital of $1,750,000. The present quotation of its stock on the public exchanges applies to the new shares.

The Controller has called for a statement of the condition of the National banks May 1.

The question of listing pipe-line certificates will be presented to the next meeting of the Governing Committee of the Chicago Stock Exchange. The proposition is generally looked upon with favor, and there is little doubt but that the exchange will adopt it.

Northern Pacific earnings the fourth week in April increased $42,000, and the mileage gained 729. Louisville earnings the fourth week increased $8,800. President Dillon says the net earnings of the Union Pacific will not show a decrease for April; the falling off is confined to gross earnings. Lake Shore earnings for the fourth week in April increased $8,768, and for the month decreased $12,474.

The Page bill, which permits the investment of about $400,000,000 of savings-bank funds in railroad and other securities, is said to have passed the New York Legislature.

"Not encouraging" is the reported condition of the anthracite coal trade.

A report has been made to the Chancellor that Jersey Central is in a solvent condition, and may be restored to the control of the stockholders. Gowen is reported as saying that within ten days the road would be out of the Receiver's hands and leased to Reading.

Parties concerned deny that the negotiations for the sale of Union Pacific collateral trust bonds have fallen through.

Regarding the reported combination of East Tennessee and other roads it is now said that no terms have yet been agreed upon.

The exports of domestic and foreign products for March increased upwards of $15,000,000. For the first quarter of the year the gain was nearly $41,000,000. Imports for March decreased $7,866,000, and for the quarter decreased $1,400,000.

The leading sensation in the stock market is the sudden flopping over of the Vanderbilt family into new, and some people here say stronger, positions in the railroad corporations in which they are most deeply interested. The resignation of Vanderbilt Sr. from the Presidency may be called a distinction without a difference. Besides, the other members of the family are provided for in a way that not only protects them against want, but puts them practically in the same position the family has always held—that is, in full control of the Vanderbilt properties.

It is talked in New York that Mr. Vanderbilt said to a friend that he had 50,000 shares of New York Central left, which was in one certificate, and if he was to have his way in the future running of the property he would see that the West Shore Road did not earn the interest on its bonds. The friend also says Mr. Vanderbilt has long intended retiring from the management of his roads, but did not even intimate the fact to his own sons until a week ago, and his wife did not know it till Thursday afternoon. He does not think his resignation will have any depressing effect on the Vanderbilt stocks.

"A good source" says an examination of New York Central books has shown that only 20,000 shares stand in the name of W. H. Vanderbilt.

The American Express Company is reported to have been selling treasury stock, and the stock now in circulation is said to amount to about $15,000,000. The authorized capital is about $18,000,000.

> When the Chicago Stock Exchange was formed it was the idea of its projectors to avoid the mistakes of preceding boards and to make it so far as possible a popular institution. The old Stock Board was a close corporation, and was managed by a body of Directors none of whom were active members, and who were, therefore, not qualified to judge of the needs of the institution, and who, in fact, did nothing but sit down upon it and hamper its business. When the present Stock Exchange was organized it was given a broad and liberal basis. Every member was to participate in its management and to have an interest in its growth. It was this platform that attracted public attention and gave the exchange the tremendous boom with which it started one year ago. But the very success of its start was what turned the heads of a few prominent brokers, and they succeeded in reversing the whole theory of its organization by causing the overthrow of the original Governing Committee, composed of active brokers, and electing in their place a committee composed of men whose sole qualification for the position was their wealth. They took good care, however, to feather their own nests by electing themselves along with the rest. Having thus placed the affairs of the exchange in the hands of twenty-four men, of whom only five were in the least interested in the institution, the natural consequence followed. The Governing Committee met infrequently, seldom had a quorum, and when a quorum was present only routine business was rushed through with. This bold declaration may be made, and can meet no denial, that since the day of the last annual election in June, 1882, the Governing Committee of the Chicago Stock Exchange has done absolutely nothing to encourage or build up the business of the exchange. Active brokers have proposed various new departures with the idea of building up trade, but at last have given up all protest in despair of bucking against a stone wall of indifference. The memberships, which sold as high as $750, are now offered freely at $130. The only business transacted is between five brokers, and consists in the transfer of a few bonds, usually in $1,000 lots. The sales of stock reported are confined to one stock, viz.: Atchison, and are generally made in ten-share lots.
>
> If the exchange were poor financially there might be good excuse for the Governing Committee to refrain from introducing new features, but the following figures speak for themselves. The receipts from all sources since its organization have been:

> There is thus a balance in the treasury of $110,192.08, or an increase of over $18,000 upon the original capital derived from the sale of memberships. And yet with this exhibit, and with the knowledge that the business of the exchange is dwindling day by day, the only idea that the Governing Committee seems to be capable of entertaining at present is to reduce the salaries of employés and officers, and thus diminishing still further the facilities of the exchange. It is the impression among most of the brokers that the committee could better afford to spend $10,000 additional during the coming year in giving better facilities, and in adding new features to the institution, which without some such stimulus will continue to fade away as it is doing at present.

The following were yesterday's bidding quotations of local stocks on the Chicago Stock Exchange, except where a dagger (†) indicates that the asking price is given:

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, May 5.—[Special.]—The stock market was tolerably steady during the forenoon on a fair volume of business. The exceptions were: New York Central 1 per cent lower, Canada Southern ⅝ lower. Manitoba was also weak and 1 per cent lower. Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & Indianapolis was ¾ lower, Hannibal & St. Joe ½ lower. Exceptions the other way were: Northwestern and Northern Pacific preferred each ⅛ higher and Canada Pacific 1 per cent higher. Rochester & Pittsburg advanced 1 per cent, Columbia & Greenville 2 per cent, and Richmond & Danville ¾. Jersey Central was ⅛ lower. The market was firm through the hour and a half to 2 o'clock, and the net result was an advance of ⅛ to ¾, the latter on Hannibal & St. Jo preferred, to 97¾, all other advances not exceeding ⅜. The Vanderbilt stocks continued firm, New York Central advancing ¼ and Lake Shore ⅛. In the last hour the market was ⅛ to ¾ lower, the latter on Lackawanna. Canada Pacific declined ½, Jersey Central ⅝, Denver ⅝, St. Paul ⅝, Union Pacific ⅝, and New York Central ⅛. These changes left the general market ⅛ to 1⅜ lower than last night, the latter on Denver. New York Central is 1⅛ lower than last night, Union Pacific ¼, and other stocks a smaller fraction.

The Herald's money article article says: It is dreadfully monotonous the having to report the same thing over and over again, but so long as the stock market remains in its present state of indecision and dullness there is no escape from doing so. As has been the case for many days past, this morning's market was weak at one time and strong at another, but taking the good with the bad it was so utterly lacking of any decided spurt upward or push downward that any particular record of its changes seems unnecessary. As far as the changes of the day went, the whole matter may be dismissed by stating that prices wavered in the morning, grew stronger at midday, and were suspiciously feeble in the afternoon. There were a few items of news. The Mutual Union Telegraph stockholders met today and almost unanimously voted to reduce the capital of the company from $10,000,000 to $2,500,000.

The effect of the bill passed at Albany yesterday, permitting savings banks to "go as they please" in the investment of their depositors' money, tended to depress Government bonds and enhance the value of miscellaneous dividend-paying securities. With close and careful management the discretion afforded by the bill may be productive of good results. If, upon the contrary, this liberty of action leads to the placement of deposits in highly-promising but more or less questionable investments, the result is sure to be disastrous. The probabilities that New Jersey Central will shortly get out of the hands of the Receiver and into those of its stockholders are gaining ground. With regard to this matter the following, which is more or less gossipy, is being talked over today: In the arrangement intended to relieve Jersey Central from present embarrassments some provision not yet fully determined is made for the income bondholders, who are refraining from legal proceedings pending the dissolution of the Receivership. Several propositions have been suggested, such as the issuance of preferred stock or a new mortgage bond, with past due income dividends to be funded. The Jersey Central was authorized to issue $8,000,000 of additional stock, but nothing has been done in the matter. It is suggested that perhaps this stock will be created and used to take up the adjustment and income bonds. The largest holders of these bonds claim that full interest was earned in 1878, 1880, 1881, 1882, and for the six months ending May 1, 1883; making amount due on the latter date rather more than $750,000, or nearly 31½ per cent of back interest.

BOSTON.

BOSTON, Mass., May 5.—[Special.]—The local market is steady at about 5 per cent for call loans and business accommodations. At the clearing-house today balances loaned at 2½@3 per cent—about equally—and New York funds sold at 17@25c per $1,000 discount. The gross exchanges were $12,589,118, and the balances $1,679,639.

The exchanges for the week were $81,082,500.

Sterling exchange is quiet at 485½ and 483 for sight draft and sixty-day bills respectively. The week just ended has fully verified all the predictions made for it, in point of strength and activity. The local list has certainly gained as a whole, and in spite of the uncertain elements still operating upon the New York market, the feeling of confidence here is slowly growing, and a disposition on the part of outsiders to venture in a small way has commenced to show itself. Another week like the last will go far toward putting the market on a healthy basis and inducing an active demand for speculative as well as for investment securities.

The Bell Telephone rights expired at 2 o'clock this afternoon. At that hour nearly the entire number had been sent in, and the remaining few will, without doubt, in spite of the provision to the contrary, be honored, even if they are late in coming. One-half of the new stock will be issued next Tuesday and the balance in July. The stock sold up to 229 after the board today, and 235 is talked for it next week. Atchison was firmly held at 84@84¼ sales, and 84 bid; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy gained ¼; a single sale of Boston & Albany was made at 180, and Eastern was strong at 44, with 43¾ bid.

Intimations have been thrown out in certain quarters that the application for an injunction restraining the union of the Eastern and Boston & Maine Railroads, now pending, is but the first of several legal objections to be raised. On the other hand it is positively asserted by those well-informed, that the Trustees will soon get together, discuss the matter, agree upon such a change in the lease as they may desire, and that the officials of both roads will accept the same. At all events the matter promises to be harmoniously adjusted very soon without in any way hindering the execution of the lease. Atlantic & Pacific securities are again on the boom. Mexican Centrals weakened upon an ill-founded report that the Government had shut down on its subsidy payments. In other securities the change was only fractional.

PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 5.—[Special.]—Pennsylvania Railroad has been offish today because London attempted to sell some stock in this market. Since the declaration of the dividend the only support for the shares has been furnished by the British demand, and now that the movement has turned the other way there appears to be an inability to provide a market for the allotments that are commencing to come out for sale. Reading Railroad was comparatively steady, but there was only a little disposition to trade in it. The Northern Pacifics were held better than the rest of the list because their traffic could in no way be affected by accidents to the trunk lines; and because the clique in those stocks was held in good shape. Buffalo, New York, and Philadelphia was inactive. Lehigh Navigation stock dropped slightly. Northern Central was dull. The market closed weak. The market closed feverish. COMMERCIAL.

The leading produce markets were wildly excited Saturday. There was more of "history" crowded into the record of that one day, in a commercial way, than the average of a week—perhaps one might say a month and still be within bounds. Bogus news about wheat, unnecessary excitement about hot corn, wild turmoil in rye, and a genuine scare in provisions which sent prices "kiting" were the more prominent features, while the background was by no means lacking in interest.

Provisions were active and excitedly higher. There was a tinge of weakness early in sympathy with the depression in corn, and the market ruled rather tame till near noon, but then started up, and lard fairly (or unfairly) went "on the rampage," while other product woke up in sympathy. Lard advanced 25c for June delivery, and closed 15c higher than Friday afternoon, at $12.07½, while July closed 15c higher, at $12.07½, and August 15c higher, at $12.00. There was a sharp demand to fill June shorts, and the excitement was quietly helped by moderate purchasing on the part of the firm supposed to be already long. This month strengthened in company, some parties waking up to the fact that there is a good deal of May lard yet undelivered. The rush was supposed to have been started by the receipt of buying orders on account of parties on the Continent of Europe, who are short of lard, and regard transatlantic stocks as too small to be safe for the short side. Pork advanced 22½c and closed 17½@20c higher than Friday afternoon, at $19.85 for May and $20.05 for July. It was said that there is also a good deal of May pork yet undelivered, which is regarded as a sign of locking up, since there is plenty of it here if the holders only wanted to put it out. Meats advanced 10c, and closed strong at $10.60 for May and $10.75 for July short ribs. There was a much better shipping demand for meats, mostly on Southern account, one party alone taking 8 car-loads. Liverpool reported 6d advance in lard, and the local hog market was firm, while it was said that hogs are not coming in at the plentiful rate promised by the bears only a few days ago. The packing of this city since the close of February includes about 325,000 hogs, against 511,000 head to same date last year, and 470,000 to do in 1881.

Flour was in better demand and relatively firm. There were several export orders, though not for large lots, and the local trade was a little better. Coarse millstuffs were weak, being in larger supply than wanted.

Wheat was active and irregularly lower. The market declined 1@1⅛c, and closed fully 1c below the latest regular prices of Friday. The market started down on a report, which was afterwards denied, that the Washington figures for this month will show a big improvement in crop conditions. It was helped down by the break in corn and, perhaps, by the moist weather here, with reports of a high temperature in the Southwest. The British markets were called 6d per quarter higher, and private cables noted them as strong, but there was no big buying here. A good many folks, both in New York and in the West, seemed to have concluded that wheat has probably seen as much of a bulge as it will bear for the present, but were afraid to sell it down lest they should get caught in a trap. Hence the trading was chiefly in small lots of 5,000 or 10,000 bu, and a good deal of it was of the scalping order. Still the strength in the long futures was preserved; it was noted that September sold within about ⅛c of the price for August, while the latter was only ⅛c below July, and all three were above the price for May. Car lots were quiet, and nominally lower in sympathy with futures. May closed at $1.12¾ and July at $1.16 bid.

Corn was active and weak. It declined 1@1⅛c and closed 1c below the latest prices of Friday, at 53⅞c for May and 57⅛c for July. The British markets were called dull, with an easier tone on cargoes to arrive, but no decline on lots in store. Our receipts were somewhat larger, and the general tendency of this, with the foreign news, was to easier prices here. But the market took its tone almost entirely from the miserable business of posting as hot a little mess of corn which ought never to have been taken into store at all, and might with advantage have been quietly given to the fishes after its character was discovered. The posted notice was only up about forty-five minutes before being removed, but in that time the news had been telegraphed all over the world. New York tumbled nearly 2c per bu, and the people there sent in large orders to sell. Buyers here were more willing to take the offerings when they understood the true state of the case, but there was too much on sale to permit a reaction, especially as the atmosphere was heavy and not favorable to the storage of corn, which caused less inclination to carry it through hot weather. There was a fair shipping demand, and new mixed sold well towards the price for No. 2, while rejected was heavy except when in favorite houses. We note that seller September sold at 59⅛c and the year at 51@51⅛c.

Oats were dull and heavy, declining, and closing about 1⅛c below the latest prices of Friday, except on the new crop, August closing only ⅛c lower. The market was heavy throughout, though the drop in prices occurred early in the session, about the time that corn went down, and had not strength enough to rally later. Our receipts were larger, which made cash lots dull to rally later. Indeed, there was another dash of weakness just at the close, chiefly in July. Our receipts were larger, which made cash lots heavy, and store lots were entirely nominal.

Rye was active and excitedly higher, though the excitement only lasted for a few minutes, and several would-be sellers got left, as the market did not hold up while they crossed the hall. The rise was chiefly in June, which advanced 3⅛c, selling to 70½c, immediately dropped back to 69c sellers, and closed at that figure. Seller July sold at 68c and closed nominally at 69c. The strength is supposed to have been started by the liberal shipments of the last week—about 280,000 bu—which made the shorts anxious to fill. It was also thought that some purchases were made for export to Germany.

Barley was dull, and quoted easier in sympathy with corn. There was no trading except in sample lots. No. 2 for May was quoted at 80c bid and 82c asked, with No. 3 do at 53c bid and 55c asked.

The lumber market continues fairly active, and no changes are reported in prices. Cargoes sell at about the same figures as a week ago, and yard-dealers profess to be following closely the last manufactured price-list. It is claimed they cannot replace their stock at present cargo prices and cut the list a thread. The lake receipts are increasing, but are not expected to be heavy before the middle of the month.

The call for staple and fancy dry goods continues moderate, there being little inquiry except for such articles as are needed for the reassortment of stocks, which at country points have become considerably broken under a good demand. Boots and shoes are dull, and the movement in clothing, hats and caps, etc., is also restricted. Groceries are going out as freely as could be expected, and the market continues to display a firm and healthy tone. Coffees are still in active demand, and show positive strength. There was just a moderate demand for dried and canned fruits, and the general market was weak. Fish continue in good request and are steady. Little change was apparent in the situation of the market for dairy products. Buyers evidently anticipate lower prices, and are not taking anything in advance of current needs. Prices of green fruits ruled firm, in expectation of an active trade. Oils did not show much activity, the weather continuing unfavorable. Metals and tinners' stock remain quiet and easy. Hay was firm. Hides and leather remain quiet. There was a small demand for coal and pig-iron, and prices were unsettled.

The seed market was unchanged, most kinds being dull. The offerings were small, and there was little call for any variety, flaxseed being the most salable. Poultry was in moderate request and steady. Potatoes were salable in a small way to the city trade, and the light offerings of car-lots brought previous prices. Eggs were steady.

Hogs were active and firm at $7.00@7.40 for light, at $7.00@7.30 for mixed, and at $7.30@7.65 for heavy. Cattle were in good demand and were firm at $4.00@6.60 for common to extra. The receipts for the week were 28,500 cattle, 82,500 hogs, and 13,500 sheep, against 20,635 cattle, 118,462 hogs, and 16,993 sheep for the corresponding week last year.

Fairbank & Co. had a notice posted on 'Change yesterday averring that their statement of the stock of lard in Liverpool was substantially correct. It will be remembered that THE TRIBUNE gave the substance of a telegram which characterized their figures as "ridiculous."

There was great excitement on 'Change Saturday about the posting of 3,907 bu and some odd lbs of rejected corn in the Illinois River Elevator. It was the opinion of many parties in the trade that the posting was decidedly unnecessary. Its total value is not more than about $1,900, and for the sake of saving a very small part of that small sum the announcement was made which reduced the selling value of the corn in store here not far from $70,000, to say nothing of that en route to the seaboard, the quantities on the way hither, and the large lots already at tidewater. It is no wonder if many folks thought of the proverb about being "penny wise and pound foolish."

It seems that a good deal of rye flour has recently been sold in this market at $3.50 and less. Some 400 brls changed hands Friday at about $3.45, which was not reported till the fact was brought out by our little notice.

There is reason to think that some members of the Open Board have been doing business for literally nothing, and finding themselves as well as customers.

St. Louis is reported to have about 1,500,000 bu of corn in good condition, which is being shipped south for export:

Parties in St. Louis who contracted to ship a lot of corn down the river bought it at May delivery, expecting the cash property would be delivered. It was not, however, and now those parties find themselves in a position where they have to go into the market and purchase the cash grain in order to fill their contracts for shipment. The quantity involved is estimated at 750,000 bu. This is said to be reason for the advance in corn which took place in St. Louis yesterday when Chicago was weak.

The following table shows the range of the day on the leading classes of trade in provisions and grain; also the latest (regular) buyers' price for round lots Saturday, compared with the previous day. A star (*) indicates that sellers asked more than 2½c in provisions or ⅛c in grain above the figures bid:

PROFITABLE LIBERALITY.

[Carson (Nev.) Appeal.]—A lot of Boston tourists were recently traveling in a sleeping car, also a Nevada traveler. In the morning when the porter went round to collect his assessments on bootblacking there was a great commotion among the Boston tourists. Some paid him a five-cent nickel, and those who had no nickel were compelled to yield up short bits. All the while the Nevada man, dressed in ordinary clothes, sat reading his newspaper. When the porter reached him he looked up inquiringly.

"Did you black my boots, sir?"

"Yes, sah."

"You did a splendid job; never had my boots blacked so well before on this line. Here's three dollars."

When the porter pocketed the money the Boston people looked up astonished, and presently it was rumored about that John Mackey was aboard or Enoch Strother was out on a campaigning trip. In a few minutes the Nevada man and the porter met (by chance) in the smoking-room.

The traveler gave the darkey a drink out of a black bottle, and the porter winked continuously for nine seconds as he drank the traveler's health.

The mass-meeting at the Central Music-Hall last evening to indorse the action of the Philadelphia Convention was a success so far as the attendance of the members of the secret societies was concerned; but aside from those in uniform there were not 300 Irishmen present. An admission fee of 50 cents, however, played a small part in keeping away a great many who would otherwise have been there. The Socialists formed on Market square and marched to the hall, where they arrived about 7 o'clock, much to the relief of those in waiting. The Ancient Order of Hibernians, the Hibernian Rifles, and the Clan-na-Gael were largely represented, about 1,000 of the membership of the organizations occupying seats.

ON THE PLATFORM.

On the platform were Patrick Egan, Alexander Sullivan, Judge Jameson, J. J. Healy, Dr. Guerin, Thomas Sennot, the Hon. John Dugan, the Hon. George R. Davis, Judge Barnum, Judge Prendergast, Frank Agnew, Judge Rogers, Bernard Callaghan, Ald. Sheridan, Joseph Rutter, Richard Tuthill, Frank Hoffman Jr., John M. Smyth, John M. Dunphy, J. J. Curran, Capt. Prindiville, and Patrick Melody.

JUDGE MORAN.

It was a quarter after 9 when Judge Moran called the gathering to order. He said that prior to the constitutional agitation movement inaugurated in 1879 the Irish people did not understand the methods of agitation, and the friends of Ireland in this country were without unity and substantially without purpose. The Land League was an educator—a unifier, and the Irish of America now appreciated what they could do through organization and association for their countrymen at home—had learned the importance of being welded together in one mass so that their effort might be as the effort of one man, but with strength of 100,000. [Applause.] After referring to what England had offered in alleviation of the wrongs of the Irish, he said no Government had a right to claim obedience or allegiance from a people without, in return therefore, giving them a just Government—protection to life and property and liberty. If it exacted from them obedience and allegiance on any other condition it was taking from them with the strong hand what no law or constitution would permit it to take. It became their duty steadily, prudently, determinedly to go on with organization upon the platform of the new National League, and keep up the agitation, not for the purpose of making a grand splurge, but of being united, prudent, just, and giving to the men who were making the magnificent struggle for constitutional freedom at home that support which their labors entitled them to—support which would egg them on in their task of wringing sooner or later from the English Government measures that would give the Irish people home rule. This they were entitled to under the English constitution and laws, and when they got it they would adhere to their determination to get what they were entitled to under the Providence of God. [Applause.]

MAYOR HARRISON.

Mayor Harrison was next introduced, and was received with applause. He said the Irish people were being ruled and not governed. They had a yearning for self-government, which from the nature of things they would continue to demand, and should never be satisfied until that grand principle had been established. [Applause.] What Ireland wanted was not an independent government, but home-rule for the Irish as well as for the English, and England might as well concede the inevitable now as twenty or thirty years hence. [Applause.] He believed Ireland's liberty would have to be won in America. [Applause.] He did not mean that her liberty should be won by war, but agitation would do its work. What the Irish people wanted was to make a prudent, persistent fight, as suggested by Parnell, and to show to the world the beggary and poverty to which British rule had brought Ireland, and victory would be sure. He regretted that the Land League had passed away, for he had admired it and its works, but he had hope for the new organization, and heartily indorsed its platform of principles, for the especial reason that it was in the interest of united action. In conclusion, he turned to Alexander Sullivan, who was on the platform, and congratulated him on his accession to the position of the leader of the Irish people of the country as the President of the National League, admonishing him to be prudent, and promising him his prayers that he might be a great instrument in advancing the cause of the freedom of Ireland.

CONGRESSMAN DAVIS.

The Hon. George R. Davis was the next speaker. He was pleased to join in the ratification of the action of the Philadelphia Convention. That convention marked an epoch in the history of the Irish race and might mark an epoch in the history of this country. [Applause.] The United States was interested in the subject. While the Government would not encourage a revolution that promised no success and would leave the people in a more deplorable condition than before, the Nation had set the example of the method and manner of securing a free and prosperous country. [Applause.] This Nation took a further interest in the matter from gratitude for services rendered, Irishmen having contributed much to make the United States famous throughout the world. The interest of self would prompt action, for the question of forced emigration to this country would come up in Congress for settlement. [Applause.] America sympathized with Ireland, and the Irish here should do nothing which would prevent Americans from standing shoulder to shoulder with them. They should raise their standard on the high plane of manhood, and not forget that in the prosperity of this Nation was the hope of Ireland and the refuge of the liberty of mankind. [Applause.]

JUDGE PRENDERGAST.

Judge Prendergast followed with a few remarks, and congratulated the audience upon the fact that Congressman Davis had assured them that the Irish cause found sympathy at the National Capital. It was significant, he thought, that the interest in the movement was extending, and that among those most deeply interested were found many who had fought the battles of our country in the late War. [Applause.] The demand of Ireland was not in the interest of revenge, but in the interest of self-government, but if the oppression continued, the seeking of revenge would be the consequence. [Applause.] He read, in the course of his further remarks, a letter from John Boyle O'Reilley, of Boston, who had been invited to be present, but who could not attend, in which THE TRIBUNE was complimented, and in which great satisfaction was expressed at the result of the Philadelphia meeting. In conclusion he deprecated dynamite as a remedy for Ireland's troubles, but advised agitation, saying that when it was found that her liberty could not be obtained peaceably he would be in favor of a resort to arms in an honorable, open warfare. [Applause.]

COL. TUTHILL.

Richard Tuthill followed with a few remarks. He said the time must come when all Americans would recognize the fact that the cause of Ireland was their cause. The American colonies revolted because denied the right of self-government, and, under the leadership of Washington, fought for their liberties. The Irish should show the American people that the cause they asked them to become interested in was the cause of Washington and Jefferson [applause]; and then every lover of liberty, whether he be Protestant or Catholic, Republican or Democrat, would attend their meetings and strike hands with them, and, when the time came to strike for liberty in Ireland and free its people, they would have a Nation of 50,000,000 at their backs. [Applause.]

WILLIAM P. BLACK.

The Chairman then read a letter from William P. Black, in which he said: "We pray for Ireland's liberation through the victories of peace, but our hearts are with her children in their resolve to have her deliverance at any price, even that of an open war." [Applause.]

PATRICK EGAN.

Patrick Egan, the Treasurer of the Land League, was next introduced. He commenced by referring to the late Philadelphia Convention, and gloried over its victory, saying that it had gained the almost united approval of the American people and press. The only notable objector he knew of was an anonymous writer in THE TRIBUNE, who had maligned Mr. Sullivan, himself, and others, who he described as a prototype of James Carey, the informer, amid great applause. Following this he spoke of the work of the Land League and concluded by thanking the audience for the privilege which had been accorded him.

ALEXANDER SULLIVAN.

Alexander Sullivan was the next speaker. He was very warmly greeted, and expressed his gratitude therefor. Men, he said, who had been his enemies under a false impression had become his warmest friends when acquainted with the truth. For his remaining enemies, who would not be convinced, he had only the indifference that became manly self-respect. In his position he needed the coöperation of every man who thought the liberty of a people worth struggling for. He would be conscious in the future of no enemies except those of Ireland and its cause. [Applause.] He then adverted to the convention, and spoke of the purposes of the new organization and the methods by which it proposed their accomplishment. The convention was too large, too intelligent, too patriotic to be "captured." The league was organized as it would be administered so long as he was at its head, not as a dictator, but as a faithful ally of the friends who were in the front. They proposed to give faithful allegiance to the constitutional movement in Ireland, and, as American citizens, to show that there was another Constitution which they loved, for which they would die, which would never be disgraced or violated by any act of theirs—the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.] The organization meant no menace to the American institutions, no insecurity to the Government, no encroachment upon the rights of citizens, no departure from the duties of citizenship. They sought the sympathy of the world. He believed they had almost won the sympathy of America by agitation, and they proposed to keep this up, believing that no Government was strong enough to withstand the united opinion of this great Republic. Their aim was to compel England to do Ireland justice. They did not seek complete independence for her. They were not going to engage in the foolish work of attempting to put an army in the field while the people were impoverished and the enemy was at peace with the world. I would to God the time might come when, with reason and justice, they might put an army in the field. [Applause.] They did not propose to dictate to the leaders on the other side, but to say to them: "Determine your course, and count upon united exiled Ireland as your auxiliaries." They asked the world to enable them to take their position among the free and prosperous nations of the earth. With union and organizations and a combination of organizations, and the aid of the wealthy Irishmen outside, he believed their efforts would be crowned with success.

Mr. Flavin then sang "God Save Ireland," the whole audience rising and joining in the chorus, and at its conclusion three cheers were given for the National League, and three more for Ireland.

OVER THE SEA.

THE CRIMINAL INQUIRIES.

DUBLIN, May 5.—Fitz-Harris will be tried by a special jury as accessory to the murder of Burke and for the murder of Cavendish. An entirely new jury panel has been summoned.

A man named Kinsella has confessed to the police at Kilmainham Jail that he was concerned in the murder of Lord Leitrim. Kinsella is believed to be insane.

CORK, May 5.—O'Connor, committed to jail for refusing to give evidence at a private inquiry, was again called upon for testimony. He still declined, and was again remanded.

THE IRISH INFORMER EPIDEMIC.

[Capt. Finerty's Citizen.]—The Citizen does not desire to say a word in mitigation of the disgrace brought upon Ireland by dastardly informers. We desire that the Irish people may feel the sting of their shame so deeply that neither Carey nor one of his infamous tribe can survive their wrath when the day of opportunity and retribution shall have arrived. The informer has done more injury to Ireland than the combined bayonets of the English garrison. He is not alone the scourge, but the reproach, of the Irish people. He is the filthiest reptile that ever crawled upon degraded earth. Heaven abhors him, and even Hell has more decency than to desire him as a permanent settler.

Of all the dirty "dunghills" that have made Irish "State trials" stink in the nostrils of humanity, the gang now making the Dublin atmosphere unbearable stand unrivaled. They smell ranker than dead dogs. The mothers that bore them would be justified in cursing and renouncing them. The miserable traitors—they chose a few years of dishonored life rather than a gallant death! Of them it could never have been written that

Nevertheless, while not apologizing for our national disgrace, but rather putting on the ashes of humiliation as we acknowledge it, we desire to remind our readers, and particularly the editor of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, that informers are by no means an Irish monopoly. Englishmen, who sneer so much at Irish treason, have shown themselves among the most debased of Caucasian people. Have they forgotten the alleged "Popish plot"? It would never do to quote any Irish, or even Catholic, author on the subject. We beg leave to lay before them Lord Macaulay's vivid description of that disgraceful episode, which occurred during the reign of Charles II., of billy-goat memory. It is taken from Vol. 1, pages 216 to 223, of Porter & Coates' edition of the History of England, Philadelphia, as follows:

[Then follows a long extract from the book of what happened several centuries ago in England.]

THOMAS BRENNAN.

NEW YORK, May 5.—The newly elected Council of the Irish National League of America have made arrangements with Thomas Brennan, late Secretary of the Irish National Land League of Ireland, and Honorary Secretary of the National League, which succeeded it, to organize branches of the new league in the United States. For this purpose he will deliver a series of lectures in the principal cities and towns of the States, beginning in this city the 21st inst.

A PLUG HAT

WHICH WILL OVERTURN A PARLIAMENT HOUSE.

NEW YORK, May 5.—[Special.]—A Harlem gunsmith and model-maker who has had considerable experience in constructing intricate machinery, including devices for handling powerful explosives, said today that he had in the last few months made two socalled infernal machines that were concealed in innocent-looking silk hats. The machinery is operated by clockwork. He added: "To conceal the machinery, there is placed over it a concave mirror. Any curious person looking into the hat would not notice its shallow depth because of the appearance his face would assume. The can is intended for nitro-glycerine, and will hold considerably more than a quart. It is intended that the man who wishes to use the machine shall wear it into the building he wishes to injure. Removing his hat, and placing it against a wall, he will take a handkerchief out of it, and at the same time remove the pin that allows the clockwork to strike. Then he will put on a soft hat which he will take from his pocket and walk away."

FINERTY VS. SULLIVAN.

THE SECOND-DISTRICT CONGRESSMAN'S REPLY TO THE CRITICISM OF THE LEAGUE PRESIDENT.

CHICAGO, May 5.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—An evening paper of yesterday contained an interview with Alexander Sullivan, President of the Irish National Land League of America, in which he is represented as having expressed himself in the following terms:

Being asked to explain the apparent faction trouble in the convention, Mr. Sullivan continued: "There is little or nothing to it. It was alleged in Philadelphia that John Finerty was allied with O'Donovan-Rossa, but nothing of the kind was apparent in the convention. Finerty felt aggrieved because his motion to consider the resolutions seriatim was overruled. He had the floor, and had abundant opportunity to state his objections to the resolutions, but failed to do so. Had he shown any disposition or desire whatever to do so he would most certainly have been accorded an attentive and respectful hearing. On the part of the convention there was simply a disposition to prevent any long and wearisome debate, because it would have dragged in matters not pertinent to the question, and would have annoyed and embarrassed Mr. Parnell. Instead of stating his objections, Finerty made a speech condemning the resolutions. The Committee on Resolutions was composed of purely representative men, were in session all night, and their report was treated exactly the same as a report made by Mr. Finerty in the Chicago Convention."

I shall deal chiefly with that part of the quotation which begins with "Finerty felt aggrieved" and ends with "an attentive and respectful hearing." I suppose Mr. Sullivan has at least sufficient intellectual ability to withhold him from misrepresenting my position in the convention, and I will therefore ascribe his peculiar criticisms to inattention, inadvertance, or anything else in the line of unintentional misrepresentation, which may serve to cloak a grave misstatement of facts.

In the first place I did not "make a speech condemning the resolutions." My language was "that certain sentiments were contained in some of the resolutions which would prevent me from voting for them unless such sentiments were explained." I had hoped that my appeal to the justice of the convention would have been met, at least half way. In this I was disappointed. Mr. Brown of St. Louis accused me of having failed to state my objections in language very similar to that employed by Mr. Sullivan in his interview. I rose for the purpose of explaining my objection to the resolution on Irish emigration, but was refused a hearing.

The Chairman, Congressman Foran, of Cleveland, O., had the eyes of a lynx for Mr. Boland of Louisville, Mr. Armstrong of Georgia, Mr. Brown of St. Louis, Mr. Alexander Sullivan of Chicago, and other gentlemen "of that ilk," but when I sought the privileges of the floor for the purpose of explaining my objection as aforesaid he was more purblind than a constitutional Albanian. I really pitied his nearness of sight, and regretted that the convention had not presented him with a pair of spectacles, which might have rendered his organs of vision decently impartial.

Mr. Sullivan himself, after seeing and hearing my honest efforts to obtain recognition from the chair, moved the previous question on Mr. Brown's arbitrary substitute, that the resolutions as reported be adopted as a whole. This effectually locked me out of parliamentary consideration, and I lost all interest in the subsequent foreordained proceedings.

Mr. Sullivan was very kind when he said that "it was alleged in Philadelphia that Finerty was allied with O'Donovan-Rossa, but nothing of the kind was apparent in the convention." It is somewhat significant that most of the Eastern papers held me up as "the leader of the terrorists" or the "reactionists." Surely neither Americans nor British could have been inspired by a supernatural power thus to misrepresent me. It now makes little matter whence the "inspiration" came, or by what methods it was made effective. I found myself in the Philadelphia Convention confronted on the one side by the suspicion of the Irish conservitive element, and on the other by the awkwardly-concealed hostility of the delegates, who considered that I should have swallowed the political medicine prescribed for me by the eminent doctors of the gathering without making wry faces or in any way showing that I presumed to possess a soul of my own.

It is not my desire to make any personal complaint, but justice to myself and others compel me to say that the Philadelphia Convention was not conducted on free and courteous principles. The floor was chiefly occupied by a mutual-admiration society, the meaner planets of the artificial constellation revolving slavishly around the mysterious sun that gave at least temporary life to their exotic system.

As regards the Chicago resolutions in December, 1881, I did not write them—neither did I present them. I wrote the address and read it. Father Conaty read the resolutions, but he was too much of a patriot and a gentleman, having read them, to move the previous question, without allowing a chance for rational debate. I organized the Chicago Convention, but I disdained to "capture" it. I have never sought, I shall never seek, to control the National sentiments of my fellow-countrymen for personal advancement. Manipulation may be the most effective, but it certainly is not the most honorable of patriotic or political methods.

I went to Philadelphia, against my personal wish, as delegate for a Land League club organized in the district which I have the honor to represent in the American Congress. I tried to do my duty. If I have failed it was from no lack of sincere intention to be true to the interests of Ireland. Although I was treated both rudely and unreasonably, because, I honestly believe, of my personal independence, in the Philadelphia Convention, I bear no malice toward such of my countrymen as forgot that, for more than twenty years, I had been among them, battling according to my best ability for the cause of Irish independence. If every other Irishman in the world were to forsake that cause, such a wholesale desertion could not change my belief in its justice. Therefore, whether slighted or honored by Irishmen, my prayer now and to the hour of my death shall be that which sanctified the scaffold at Manchester—"God save Ireland!"

JOHN F. FINERTY.

PHIPPS FOUND GUILTY.

The Ex-Superintendent of Philadelphia's Almshouse Certain of a Term in the Penitentiary.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 5.—The jury in the trial of Phipps this morning rendered a verdict of guilty. The indictment was for forgery, and the penalty will not be less than three years in the penitentiary. The prisoner was much affected, and his former confederates are worse scared than ever.

[Maj. Phipps was the "gentlemanly" Superintendent of the Philadelphia Almshouse, who stole everything that was loose about the establishment, as well as some that were not, including the roof. He was extradited by the Canadian authorities. Being abetted by his friends in Philadelphia it took months to get him out of Canada, and he spent a long time in the Hamilton jail. There he became quite a social lion (caged) and his wife, who watched over him from outside the cage, daily brought him the dainties which he had been used to eating during his administration. Upon his wife's failure to arrive one day the Major was obliged to breakfast on prison fare, though not on the ordinary food served to common prisoners. His attendant was a man of coarse perceptions. The gentleman in confinement found fault with the meal, and fell to scolding the attendant. Upon this occasion the attendant shocked all sympathizing Canada by the celebrated remark that the food offered was a great deal better than the sawdust with which the Major had stuffed the paupers at Philadelphia.

In explanation of the fact that the Major stole the roof of the almshouse, it is only just to him to state that the roof was made of copper, and was valuable.]

OBSERVE THE WORKINGS

Of the High-License Law—See What It Has Done for Two Iowa Cities.

BOONE, Ia., May 5.—[Special.]—The strike of the Boone saloonkeepers against the new $500 license ordinance collapsed today. The ordinance went into effect May 1, and the saloonkeepers all closed up on that day and held a picnic in the woods, where free beer and lunch were furnished. The nineteen saloons of the city remained closed for three days, when one, whose license taken out under the old ordinance did not expire until Monday, the 29th inst., opened its doors and commenced selling beer and wine under its old permit. This brought on a rupture with the rest, which culminated today in the taking out of the $500 licenses, and the fight is over. The new ordinance will cause the number of saloons to be reduced from nineteen to about six.

Whereas Des Moines Received but $12,000, She Will Now Collect $60,000.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 5.—[Special.]—Forty-nine saloonkeepers have taken out licenses at $1,000 each up to this evening, and it is thought eleven more will pay it Monday, or nearly or quite all who have been paying the $200 license before.

TWO ROUNDS.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 5.—[Special.]—There was a lively sparring exhibition here in the Clerk's office of the City Court today, in which Oliver F. Hack, a prominent lawyer, was sev rely punished by Stanley Hynson, one of the clerks of the court. The trouble grew out of a suit on the docket, an action on a promissory note, in which Hack war counsel for defendant. Hynson was a friend of the plaintiff, and Hack accused him of trying to prevent a proper settlement. Hack used violent language about the plaintiff in the suit, and when Hynson took sides with his friend Hack turned his remarks to him. Finally, Hynson told Hack if he did not stop he would knock him down.

"You will, will you?" continued Hack, with an epithet, and the next instant Hynson dealt him a powerful blow, felling him to the floor.

Hack jumped up, made at Hynson, and the latter, "shouting, "Oh, you mean fight, do you?" knocked the attorney down again.

The other clerks and lawyers interfered at this time, and prevented further trouble.

As the result of the engagement Hack has one eye in mourning and several cuts and bruises on his face. The suit was then amicably settled.

GLADSTONE'S TRICK

WHICH FAILED BADLY.

LONDON, May 5.—If in the Commons yesterday the motion for the previous question, pending the proposition of Northcote, that Bradlaugh be not allowed to take the oath had been carried, the effect would have been to prevent the putting of Northcote's motion.

The ultimate result would have been that, in the absence of any instructions from the House, such as the Speaker sought, he (the Speaker) would have been compelled to permit Bradlaugh to take the oath, as he requested at the opening of the session. The successful operation of the previous question was the chief hope of the supporters of Bradlaugh.

Bradlaugh announces that, in view of yesterday's proceedings, he has decided to visit his constituents and formally resign.

LAST THURSDAY NIGHT—WHAT IS SAID OF GLADSTONE.

LONDON, May 5.—[Special Cable.]—The occasion of the defeat of the Affirmation bill was one of great excitement in the House, which was crowded everywhere, and the announcement of the vote was the signal for an extraordinary demonstration. The members mounted on the benches, threw their hats all over the house, and yelled and shouted as frantically as if they were at a race-course. The visitors in the galleries forgot all about breaches of privilege, and stood up and shouted also, while Mr. Gladstone sat in his place and laughed heartily at the scene. The result was unexpected, and has been followed by a bitter and excited controversy in the press, the clubs, and in all classes of society. On the one hand the Ministry is assailed for its weakness. It dare not appeal to the country, and yet it will not resign. On the other hand, the question at issue is described as unimportant, not of imperial weight, and involving no degree of Ministerial responsibility.

It is certain that the Liberal party in the House is entering upon troublous times, and that the Conservatives are entirely prepared to welcome as allies at Westminster the party whom in Ireland they want to rule with the bayonet. The Irish benches are in great glee over the result, and look forward with enthusiasm to the rest of the session.

Mr. Bradlaugh's speech yesterday at the bar of the House was dignified and temperate, but on the division which ensued on Mr. Labouchère's motion the Government was beaten by 106. This is the first result of the preceding defeat, and it looks ominous.

PUBLIC WORSHIP.

PARIS, May 5.—In the Senate, Batbie contended that the decision of the Council of State, which renders clergymen of all ranks liable to suspension of their stipends, was a violation of the Concordat. He declared the Government had entered upon a downward course. The Minister of Justice replied that the Council had faithfully interpreted the Concordat. The State could not be left powerless in dealing with public worship. He would maintain the Concordat, and protect religions, but would also exact obedience to the law. The matter then dropped.

VIENNA, May 5.—Little progress seems to have been made towards adjusting the grievances which caused the bakers' assistants here to go on a strike. Last night a thousand of the strikers engaged in a riot at the assembly-rooms. The furniture was destroyed and the windows were broken. The rioters then threw up a barricade in the street to enable them to resist the police, who had been summoned to quell the disturbance, and who had a difficult time in subduing the infuriated mob. Simultaneously with this outbreak a demonstration was made in another part of the city by 400 more strikers, who attacked a building occupied by the Bakers' Association, the doors and windows of which they broke. Both parties of rioters were finally dispersed.

THE NIHILISTS.

MUCH ILL-FEELING ON ACCOUNT OF THE CZAR'S SCRUPLES AGAINST BEING BLOWN UP.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 5.—It is believed that the authorities at Moscow have been invest with power to arrest a number of persons who have been acting suspiciously in that city, and to detain them until the coronation of the Czar has taken place.

Much ill-feeling exists in some of the regiments of the army, owing to the fact that rewards are being offered to denounce any of their comrades who are known to be Nihilists.

A POWDER EXPLOSION.

SIX PEOPLE KILLED.

PORTSMOUTH, May 5.—An explosion occurred in the Government powder magazine, situated on Priddy's Head, in Portsmouth harbor today. The building was completely demolished.

Noon—Later information from Portsmouth states that the explosion in the powder magazines on Priddy's Head was caused by the accidental ignition of some powder during the filling of a quantity of shells. Only two persons were killed outright; five, however, are in a dying condition.

2 p. m.—A dispatch just received from Portsmouth states that four of the persons injured at the powder explosion have died, making the total number of fatalities six.

The reply of the Prussian Government to the letter of the Papal Secretary of State is expected immediately. It is believed to be favorable to the demands of the Vatican, and will relate rather to the abrogation of the penal provisions of the May laws than to a revision of organic laws.

The Chilian Col. Canto has had two engagements with Caceri's forces at Balconiello and Pampas de Sicaya. In both cases he routed the enemy, capturing cannon and forty rifles. The Chilians had four killed and twelve wounded, and the Monteneros fifty-nine killed. Caceri is at Tarta. His troops are demoralized.

There will be a competition shortly before the Wimbledon meeting, when twenty-five men will be selected, and from these twenty-five, at the end of the first week at Wimbledon, the team and reserves will be chosen.

BY MAIL.

ENGLISH JUSTICE.

[London Truth.]—What is this that I read?

Mr. Monckton, J. P., of Fineshade Abbey, charged at Oundle petty sessions yesterday George Gardiner, a tutor in his family, with stealing beer to the value of sixpence. Gardiner, it appears, went into the cellar without the butler's permission. He was sentenced to six weeks' imprisonment, with hard labor. Mr. Monckton sat on the bench as magistrate; but took no part in the proceedings.

A more monstrous case, I think, never came under my notice. The essence of the crime for which this unfortunate tutor is now suffering hard labor seems to be that he drew the beer himself, instead of asking the butler to do so. Here is a gentleman of education residing in the house of another gentleman. He is thirsty, and being, I suppose, a beer-drinker, consumes a small amount of that liquor. That the owner of the house might have suggested to him that he would do well to ring for a glass instead of troubling himself to get it, one can understand, but that he should have prosecuted him, and that his brother magistrates should have condemned him to six weeks' hard labor, is really almost incredible.

Compare this with the sentence on Thomas Goodall, carpenter. At Salford petty sessions he was charged with knocking his wife about until she became insensible. His mother and sister then put the poor woman on her bed, on which Thomas Goodall jumped on her, having filled her mouth with the bed-clothes. After this he, aided by his mother and sister, dragged the unfortunate woman about the room, and beat her until she was covered with bruises. During this second domestic discipline she fainted twice. This not being the first time that Goodall had assaulted his wife, he "was committed for one month's hard labor."

At Penge, the other day, a volunteer fired off his rifle and accidentally killed his next door neighbor. He was discharged with a caution. Last week two young men, who had been firing off revolvers on Wimbledon Common, were fined forty shillings each. The moral of these cases seems to be that people who promiscuously discharge fire-arms should take care to hit somebody.

CUTTING DOWN A WOODEN CRUCIFIX IN ENGLAND.

[London Truth.]—The Catholics are, perhaps, stronger in West Sussex than in any other part of England. The Duke and Duchess of Norfolk and the Dowager Duchesses of Norfolk and Leeds actively support their institutions in every possible way, and the division swarms with schools, orphanages, and convents, while the Carthusian monastery which is now building at Cowfold will be the largest establishment of the kind in Europe. It may be hoped, however, that although encouraged by ducal patronage, the conductors of these institutions will not act in such a manner as to excite aboriginal hostility. Some recent proceedings at Storrington have been eminently unsatisfactory. A priory of Premonstratensians expelled from France has been established in this place, thanks to the Duke of Norfolk, and their ground adjoins the churchyard. Recently these worthy zealots have erected a large crucifix just at the boundary. This caused so much indignation among the Protestants of the neighborhood that the Prior promised that it should be removed; but the Duke of Norfolk, with a singular want of judgment, interfered, and ordered that the crucifix should be left as it was. On this, popular feeling boiled over, and one morning the crucifix had disappeared, having been sawn down and carted away by unknown hands. The Duke of Norfolk is laboring under a serious illusion if he supposes that in such a matter as this his word is to be law. The Catholic refugees have everywhere been treated with the utmost consideration, but a few fantastical freaks of this description would bring us within measurable distance of another "No Popery" cry.

THE FIRE RECORD.

A Big Blaze in Cairo—Destruction of Halliday Bros.' Warehouse—Hanover's Loss—Other Fires.

CAIRO, Ill., May 5.—[Special.]—Halliday Bros.' large warehouse, situated on the Ohio Levee, below Second street, was destroyed by fire this morning about 6 o'clock together with the contents, flour and hay, also the office. The building was a wooden structure. The building was insured for $8,000 in the following companies: $2,000 in each, the Franklin of Philadelphia, the Connecticut Insurance Company, the Phenix of New York, and the Continental. The stock was insured for $20,000; $5,000 in the Hartford, $2,500 each in the Lorillard, Mechanics' & Traders', Phenix of New York, the Westchester, and the Northwestern & Mercantile of Boston. The fire is thought to have originated by a defective flue, which set fire to the roof of the building. Mr. George Russell, special agent of the Northwestern National, is here to adjust the loss.

HUDSON, Mich., May 5.—[Special.]—Fire last night destroyed the store, stock of general merchandise, household furniture, and barn of Pratt Bros., at Prattville, six miles south of here. The post-office, with entire contents, was also destroyed, it being in the store building. The estimated loss is $10,000; insured for $1,000 in the Hartford on building and $4,000 on stock in the Home of New York and the Fire Association of Philadelphia.

HANOVER, N. H., May 5.—Eight dwellings and outbuildings burned. Loss, $30,000; partially insured. The students of Dartmouth College did effective work in subduing the flames. Prof. Henry E. Parker, of the College, while on a ladder passing buckets, was struck by a falling chimney and his skull crushed. Physicians have hope of his recovery.

BRADFORD, Pa., May 5.—Six buildings in the business part of Tarport burned this morning. George O'Neill, sleeping in a saloon where the fire started, was fatally burned, and died this afternoon.

ELMIRA, N. Y., May 5.—Henry M. Partridge's lumber mill here burned tonight. Loss, $50,000; no insurance. The Butler Colliery Company had 500 tons of coal destroyed. Incendiary.

RONDOUT, N. Y., May 5.—Fire this morning destroyed five dwellings, two barns, and several sheds. Two children of M. Cohn—David, aged 4, and Rosa, aged 12—were consumed in the flames. Their bodies have been found.

BOSTON, Mass., May 5.—The store and dwelling of Richard Davis, at Long Plain, Mass., burned last evening, with most of its contents. Loss on building, $4,300. The stock was valued at $35,000; insured for $16,000.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5.—The bill to adjust the salaries of Postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and to change the commissions allowed Postmasters of the fourth class, rendered necessary in view of the reduced rate of postage upon letter matter from three to two cents per half-ounce, provided that the salaries of the first, second, and third classes should be readjusted, to take effect simultaneously with the reduction of rates of postage from Oct. 1. Respecting the pay of the fourth-class Postmasters the act merely fixed the rates which should apply to them, without specifying the time when the readjustment should begin. The clerks of the Sixth Auditor's office, where the readjustment of salaries will be made, have been working under the impression that the change in the fourth-class offices should take place at the same time as the other classes. Late yesterday afternoon the question arose as to the proper construction of the law, and it was argued by some officers of the department that the fact that no specified time was fixed in the act for beginning work in the fourth-class offices made it imperative upon the department to readjust the pay of the fourth-class Postmasters beginning with the date upon which the bill was approved by the President. Today the Sixth Auditor submitted the question to First-Controller Lawrence, and also conferred with Secretary Folger on the subject. Both these gentlemen were of the opinion that the readjustment of the fourth-class offices should have begun March 3. This decision will compel the Sixth Auditor to take up and adjust accounts heretofore settled on the basis of the old law (numbering in all about 45,000), and cast the commissions for each of them, so as to make them conform to the new law. After the readjustment of the pay of the fourth-class Postmasters, beginning with March 3, the Government will owe each of them an increase of 8 to 40 per cent, according to the amount of stamps canceled, and this increase will have to be paid quarterly until Oct. 1, when the act regulating postage goes into effect. The payment of this increase will necessarily involve a large deficiency in the appropriation for the pay of Postmasters the current fiscal year.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5.—[Special.]—Sufficient funds to insure ability to pay for the proposed Garfield monument having been secured, the committee charged with selecting a design and an artist will meet shortly in Cincinnati. There has already been such communication among the members of the committee as to render it reasonably certain that Mr. J. G. Ward, of Philadelphia, will be secured for the work. He is the artist of the Thomas equestrian statue erected here by the Society of the Army of the Cumberland. This is regarded by the best judges as excelling any work of the kind in the city, and many whose opinions are accepted as authority declare it to be the best in the country. While the design of the Garfield monument has not yet been decided upon, the members of the committee are said to favor one which will represent him at the Capitol. The scene of his inauguration will probably be the one chosen. The work will be of bronze, and the pedestal will, in case the design is decided upon, be a representation of the front porch of the Capitol, and the position will be that assumed when he was delivering his inaugural address. The site will probably be Iowa circle, at the intersection of Vermont and Rhode Island avenues. This is one of the most eligible situations in the city, and is only one square distant from the Garfield Memorial Church. The committee expect to perfect their arrangements so that the work may be commenced by the latter part of August or early in September. The committee is composed of Judge-Advocate-General Swaim, United States Army; Gen. Barnett, of Cleveland; Gen. Cist, of Cincinnati; Col. Corbin, United States Army; and several other members of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland.

The Civil-Service Commission in Hot Water.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5.—[Special.]—The members of the Civil-Service Commission have been overtaken by a new trouble. The premature publication of their rules while the President and Cabinet had them under consideration has been treated as a matter of extreme discourtesy, both to the President and the Cabinet. An investigation has been in progress since yesterday to try and ascertain how the rules were made public. All the copies of the members of the Cabinet are in their possession. It therefore remains for the members of the commission to account for theirs. This they have not as yet been able to do. A member of the Cabinet is authority for the statement that, if the President ascertains that any one of the Commissioners was a party to the publication, his resignation will be asked for at once. It is not because of the mere making known the rules that the President is said to object, but especially because the Cabinet was holding extra meetings to consider the rules and amend them. Making them public during this consideration is regarded as a serious violation of official courtesy. The publication was made from one copy in Washington and was sent to the New York Times and Commercial Gazette. It was telegraphed from New York after publication there to THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE. Mr. Eaton can probably obtain a certificate from those making the publication that no member of the commission was a party to the publication. The Cabinet, however, seem to doubt the commission, and to be determined to regard them guilty till they prove themselves innocent. This work is now engaging their most serious attention. The spectacle of a Civil-Service Commission receiving the grand bounce as the first effect of their own rules would be both novel and interesting.

Tucker Will Not Get the Zuni Springs.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5.—Through a miscalculation in surveying the lands for the Zuni Indian Reservation in New Mexico an error was made, and the intention of the Government that the reservation should include the springs which lie directly northeast of the boundary-line of the reservation was not carried out. Recently it has been stated that Paymaster William T. Tucker, son-in-law of Senator Logan, and his associates, have taken up six claims, three "desert" and three homestead, containing in all 2,400 acres, which embrace the springs mentioned. It was further stated that, should the claims of Tucker and his associates be granted, the water supply of the Zunis would be practically cut off. In the absence of a survey of the Tucker claims, however, they are rendered void by the issuance May 1 of an executive order amending the original order so as to include within the limits of the Zuni reservation an additional tract of land on which the above-named springs are situated. It was learned at the General Land-Office today that William T. Tucker Jr. filed an application for these lands in the Santa Fé Land Office Nov. 22, 1882.

Prince Takehito, Mr. Terashima, Japanese Minister, Capt. Kuroda, and Mr. Takahashi, Japanese Consul, New York, were presented to the President by Secretary Frelinghuysen.

Last week the Navy Department ordered the publication of the advertisement for proposals for the construction of the new steel cruisers in the New York Herald, New York Sun, Boston Herald, Philadelphia Ledger, and Baltimore Sun, as having the largest circulation in their respective cities. After the order was issued the Philadelphia Record, which has not applied for the advertisement, represented to the department that its circulation was the largest in Philadelphia. Upon investigation the department was satisfied that this statement was true, and today the Record was ordered to publish the advertisement.

In the reassignment to military command which will be necessary upon the retirement of Gen. Sherman, it is the expectation that Gen. Schofield will be transferred to the Military Division of the Missouri, now commanded by Gen. Sheridan, with headquarters at Chicago, and Gen. Pope will succeed Schofield at San Francisco. Gen. Hancock will remain in charge of the Military Division of the East, with headquarters as at present.

The following officers, now attached to the Signal Corps, will be relieved from duty in this city July 1 and ordered to join their regiments: Maj. James W. Powell, Captain, Sixth Infantry; Col. William H. Clapp, Captain, Sixteenth Infantry; Capt. S. M. Mills, Fifth Artillery; and Lieut. Richard P. Strong, Fourth Artillery. The latter officer has been in command at Fort Whipple since its establishment as a signal station in 1868.

Ex-Speaker Randall has returned from a visit to Senator Kenna, of West Virginia, thoroughly impressed with the great future of that State. "I dislike to see it," said he, "because of State pride, but the Kanawha Valley of West Virginia, will soon supply the West with coal. I am told now that Huntington's Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad cannot begin to handle its freight. Capital is pouring into West Virginia. Only recently $1,000,000 of English capital has been invested there. Railroads are being built, and the rapid development of the State is phenomenal.

THE DEATH-PENALTY.

BATON ROUGE, La., May 4.—Robert Butler, colored, was hanged at Columbia, Caldwell Parish, yesterday afternoon, for murdering George Burns and Ambrose Hunter, while they slept by their camp-fire. Columbia is thirty-five miles from a telegraph-office, and the news of the hanging was just received this morning. There was a large crowd present. Robert Butler was tried and convicted at the July term of the District Court in 1882. His case was appealed to the Supreme Court of Louisiana, and during the time of his trial before that court he broke jail and escaped. He was first captured, for the murder of these two men, in Texas, in April, 1882, and brought to Columbia. After breaking jail he made for the Indian Nation, where he hid himself. Gov. McEnery offered $300 reward for his capture and delivery to the Sheriff of this parish. The Sheriff also offered $50 reward. He was recaptured in January last in the Indian Nation. Gov. McEnery signed the death-warrant in April, to be executed on the 4th of May, 1883. The scaffold was erected in the court-yard. The prisoner confessed that he killed Burns, but he also told a different tale at other times, contradicting himself. During his confinement in jail he made a key of pieces of tin [illegible] wood to unlock his fetters, and managed [illegible] free one of his ankles. He was closely [illegible]. [illegible]D MAN.

NEWBERN, Va., May 5.—[Special.]—Intense excitement has been created in this vicinity during the last week over the discovery and vain pursuit of a wild man who has been ranging through the mountain forests of Pulaski County. He was first seen by Elias Fertch, an old and trustworthy farmer, who was on his way home after sundown. The bridle of his horse was suddenly seized by a tall and muscular man, who jumped from the deep thicket skirting the narrow roadside. Mr. Fertch had a plowpoint in his hand and threw it at his assailant, striking him on the shoulder. With a cry of pain the man leaped into the thicket and disappeared. Mr. Fertch described him as being fully six feet in hight and entirely nude, and very muscular and long-armed. His hair was, as well as the farmer could tell in the dim light, dark and tangled. The next day a large party of young men started to hunt up the mysterious wanderer of the woods, and traced him a mile up the mountain stream and then lost him. In several places where there was mud they found the print of his bare feet. Yesterday and today he was seen by several huntsmen, but he fled through the thickets like a deer, uttering, as he ran, wild shrieks. Those who saw him in the daytime own that he is either a mulatto or a very dark-skinned white man. Some weeks since a conductor on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad was beaten to death in a mysterious manner, and from all indications it is believed now that he crossed the track of this wild man and was clubbed to death. Expeditions are being organized for his pursuit and capture.

TWO SUICIDES.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 5.—[Special.]—W. A. Conkling, a gambler, was found dead in his room at Congress Hall here today, having committed suicide by taking strychnine. He came here six months ago, played with varying success, and for the last two months had "gone broke." His home was in Binghampton, where he had a wife and three children. His diary contained the following novel and philosophical entry:

"May 4, 11 a. m.—This is my last night, and if I could see any other way I would still try to live, but my misfortunes have been too many, and I feel that I am losing my mind. I cannot think or see clearly, and I know that actions of mine that were to be honorable were misconstrued. Without expense, without ceremony put me anywhere that I can rest, and to those I have wronged forgive me. Telegraph my father in Elmira. Oh! father, you'll bury me, won't you?"

His name was not signed to his dying epistle. The Coroner holds an inquest tomorrow.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 5.—[Special.]—John Mills, a driver on one of the street-cars here adopted a singular but horrible method of committing suicide early this morning. He is a strong, heavy-built man, and seated himself on a curb-stone near the car stables and dealt himself a powerful blow in the forehead with a spiked hammer. He lies in a dying condition. Family troubles caused his attempt at self-destruction.

ARKANSAS OUTLAWS.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 5.—Advices from Van Buren County, Ark., say that section of country is being held in terror by two escaped convicts, named James Miller and Thomas Katharin, who have made an almost inaccessible part of the Boston Mountains their refuge, and from which they emerge, and commit all manner of depredations on property, not even stopping at murder. These acts have continued until almost the entire population of that region have become aroused. At last accounts a party of twenty men, including some of the best citizens of Van Buren County, under command of Col. Richard Poe, had started out to hunt down the outlaws. Should they be found they will be killed on sight; but as Miller and Katharin are well-armed and most desperate men, it is feared that some of their pursuers will be slain before they are exterminated.

THE KENTUCKY ELECTION.

LEXINGTON, Ky., May 5.—[Special.]—There is much excitement over the Gubernatorial contest, and returns from seventeen counties show that T. L. Jones, of Newport, has carried nine—Jessamine, Harrison, Clark, Rowan, Fleming, Oldham, Morgan, and Elliott. The uninstructed are Wolfe, Bath, and Nicholas. Fayette is divided equally between S. B. Buckner and M. H. Owsley. Buckner carries Bourbon, Montgomery, and Owen.

The Grouping of Different Lines of Business.

There can be no better evidence of Chicago's metropolitanism than that furnished by the various sections of her main business quarter, in which have been grouped naturally, but seemingly by pre-arrangement, several trades which combine to make her the wonder of the Western world. The youth of the city can readily recall the time when business of every character was intermingled almost inextricably, and when it was difficult to remember the location of this or that business house. Jumbled together on a thoroughfare were grocery, dry goods, boots and shoes, iron, rubber, and in fact every kind of business-houses of which the city boasted, and a customer from out of town desiring to visit a certain establishment found a pocket-directory and street-guide quite indispensable. The transition from such a condition of affairs has been going on gradually but surely ever since the fire, without an apparent effort on the part of any particular trade, and today Chicago's business centre is staked off almost as completely as a section of land with lines nearly as plain, and each trade has been allotted or has taken for itself a section necessary to its proportions. The grocery, coffee, and tea, oil, tobacco, and kindred trades have been grouped in the vicinity of Wabash, Michigan, Randolph, State, South Water, River, and Lake streets; the iron trade has confined itself almost exclusively to Lake street, with only a slight digression upon Michigan avenue. South Water street is given up wholly to provisions; La Salle and Washington streets harbor brokers, commission men, insurance agents, real estate and renting agents, while Dearborn street has a liberal sprinkling of the latter. The dry goods, clothing, boot and shoe (manufacturing and wholesale) houses have about all reached the district bounded by Washington, La Salle, Jackson streets, and the river. These, of course, are not all of Chicago's lines of trade, but in the districts named are the trades and businesses enumerated, and a stranger need have no trouble in finding them.

The New Pullman Office and Apartment Building.

The work of excavating for the foundation of the fine nine-story structure to be erected by the Pullman Palace-Car Company at the southwest corner of Michigan avenue and Adams street was begun during the last week. The structure, which will be an imposing one, will be perfectly fireproof from cellar to garret—fireproof tile and iron beams being used throughout. The plans which have been drawn are for a building to answer the double purpose of an office and an apartment structure, but the domestic and business portions will be as distinct as though they were located in separate buildings. The entrance to the apartment-house, which will be on Michigan avenue, will be made as inviting and pleasing as may be, while the entrance to the office portion will be through a more business-like portal on Adams street. The building will have a frontage of 120 feet on Michigan avenue and 171 feet on Adams street, and the style of architecture will be a modification of the Norman round arched gothic, modernized and adapted to the peculiar purposes for which the building is intended, the main object being to give it an expression of dignified elegance in its simple massiveness. The first story will be built of rock-faced granit, of a reddish hue, laid up in large blocks in a heavy buttressed manner at the base, which will give it an expression of great strength. This color will harmonize pleasantly with the red pressed brick which will be used in the rest of the structure. An imposing feature of the building will be a series of arcades on the Adams street façade, supporting the superstructure, the heavy elliptic arches being supported on massive columns with beautifully-carved capitals and molded octagon bases and highly-polished red granit shafts 2x3 inches in diameter.

A marked feature of this elevation is the large central arch that spans the entrance to the court approaching the offices. The granit arch is twenty-two feet in diameter, of elliptical form, and supported on large rectangular columns, with carved caps and molded bases and polished red granit shafts. The arch is enriched in its spandrils with bold terra-cotta carvings, and will be provided with beautifully-wrought iron gates. The court referred to extends open from the grade upward, and running back at right angles to a depth of eighty feet from Adams street, and entirely open to the street, making a recess that in effect divides this elevation into two buildings, connected by the massive archway referred to, and lending a very unique and picturesque effect to the building. In the court is located the grand staircase and elevator system for the offices. The first flight of stairs will be a broad one of granit and marble, leading up to the second floor from the court. The first story of the Michigan avenue façade differs materially from the Adams street elevation in the absence of the arcades, massive granit piers taking the place of the columns. Surmounting the granit stone and encircling the street front of the building is a heavily-molded belt course or impost molding, from which starts the present brickwork of the superstructure. The brickwork is disposed in liberal masses, with broad windows. Terra cotta is to be used for the string courses and projection, but to a limited degree. There will be no stone used above the granit story. The street-corner of the building will be accentuated by a circular bay, carrying with it the effect of a tower and conservatory up through the entire hight from its massive granit base, and surmounted by an observatory. A striking feature of the elevation is that of the recessed open balconies, or rather loggias, off the parlors and libraries of the apartments, giving the impression of cozy habitation. This feature is particularly pleasing on the Adams street front, as the recessed balconies combine with the circular corbeled-out turrets at the corner of the building. The upper part of street elevations is varied by views of two-storied red-tiled roof, so disposed as to emphasize by contrast the brick features of prominence, such as the turrets and upper arcades. The open court is broken at a distance of forty feet from the street by a series of inclosed arcades running to the hight of four stories, and serving to connect the two sections of the buildings. In the basement will be located the steam-heating apparatus, the laundry for the flats, etc., and general storage space for the Pullman Company and store above. The ground or first floor will be devoted to the Purchasing Agent's store-rooms and stores. The entrance hall to the flats will be elegant, spacious, and cheerful. Connected with this hall by a large arch is an inviting, pleasant reception room opening on the avenue. The entrance hall will be made very attractive by a peculiar arrangement of tropical plants and flowers on the landings. There will be two large elevators provided for the apartments, in full view on entering the hall, in connection with the grand staircase. The second and third floors will be used as the company's offices, the second floor being occupied by the President, Second Vice-President, Secretaries, General Counsel, Cashier, Purchasing Agent, and telegraph office. The third floor will contain the offices of the General Superintendent, Ticket Agent, Division Superintendent, conductors' and porters' rooms. The fourth floor will probably be occupied as Gen. Sheridan's headquarters. The five upper floors will be used as first-class apartments of from seven to ten rooms each for families and a number of suites for bachelors ranging in size from two to four rooms. All these apartments will be arranged with a view to the greatest comfort of the occupants, and embody the most improved methods attainable. On the ninth floor, overlooking the lake, will be a restaurant with the finest appointments, and so arranged that a large covered promenade is connected with it, making a delightful resort in warm weather. In connection with the restaurant will be private dining-rooms, a parlor, and reading-room. The finish of the building will be in hard woods throughout. Fireplaces will be provided in most all the rooms, which will be heated entirely by steam in the most approved manner. Particular attention will also be paid to ventilating. Having in view the prejudice against living in a building with large steam boilers in the basement, the boilers have been removed entirely outside of and separate from the building. A number of extra rooms for servants is provided in a tenth story. The arrangement is the result of much labor, study, and research, and no pains have been spared to make it one of the most attractive and elegant structures of the kind in the world.

The cost of the building, when completed, will not fall far short of $500,000.

One of the objects sought by Mr. Pullman, the projector of this improvement, was the furnishing to those employés of the company who desired them living apartments of a superior character more convenient to their business than those in which many of them now abide. Quite a number of married and single men in the office reside in the suburbs, at inconvenient distances, and Mr. Pullman has expressed a wish that such a structure might be erected for their benefit. He says he will give them better apartments for less money than they can get elsewhere, and that they may be assured that the structure will always be in the very best of order. Nothing will be left undone to make the apartments and surroundings comfortable and inviting, and he has no doubt the venture will prove very successful.

The Strike and Its Results.

Said an architect who has been considerably embarrassed by the strike of the union bricklayers to a TRIBUNE reporter yesterday: "If this strike should end tomorrow there would be no chance for building operations to recover from the unfortunate backset the strike has given them. Of course many people who are now holding off on account of the strike would at once commence to build, but there would be nothing like the activity that would have been seen in and about Chicago at this time had the strike never been inaugurated. Nobody will be able to compute the number of proposed buildings that have been abandoned in this vicinity on account of the strike. Why, I can show you by my books no less than five dwellings and one apartment house that I would have had in hand had there been no trouble, but which have now been abandoned until another year and perhaps forever, and I have no doubt nearly every man in my line has about the same experience to relate. The fact is, many people would have built this year merely for the purpose of investing surplus funds in their possession, and not because there was any particular need of more room. And they were, therefore, in no particular hurry, and when they found that they could not build as cheap as they expected they abandoned the idea of building this year altogether. This knowledge may afford the strikers temporary elation, but it will not be long before they will find that they are less able to stand the condition of affairs they have produced than any others connected with building. Last year was a good year and architects all made money, as did contractors; but bricklayers and common laborers as a rule made simply enough to subsist on, and have no surplus to go on. They may receive outside assistance, but I feel sure that they will have to give in before the bosses, in this matter, for several reasons. It will not be long before those who are now so loud in their protestations of fealty to the strikers' cause, and who promise to furnish money to the bitter end, will see the folly of their course, and, tiring of it, will cease to replenish the union's treasury. The natural result of this will be that there will be a great many more defections from the union ranks than heretofore, for men must and will live, and when it comes to a matter of bread and butter they will not be long in choosing. Then, there is nothing rational in the union's position. It has decreed that all of its members shall be paid the same wages, no matter what their abilities. THE TRIBUNE has so fully discussed the folly of this that I will not speak further upon it than to say that this very unsubstantial position will do more to cause sensible members, of whom there are many, to withdraw from the union than anything else, and when they are brought face to face with want on account of the union's conduct these men will not be slow to choose the right path. Then above all this I believe the master masons have occupied a position which they can maintain against the men, for there seems to be no doubt that they have the moral and substantial support of nearly every man connected with building, as well as most of those people who are going to build. No work has yet been begun on the Armour, Counselman, McCoy, or other large structures that are to be raised about the new Board of Trade, and the projectors have signified their willingness to wait until such time as the strike should be ended before they would begin operations. It is thus clear that the strikers have decidedly the worse end of the situation, and that the chances are they will continue to have until they conclude to allow bosses to conduct their own affairs. As for the work now in hand, there are enough new men from the outside and deserters from the union to complete it, and no serious embarrassment will be experienced. However, I, in company with all connected with my business, heartily wish the strike would close, so that all hands could get in something like a decent year's business before the snow flies again."

In the course of a tour among architects and builders yesterday in search of news a TRIBUNE reporter made some inquiry into the relative cost of building this year and last, and the comparative cost of building for the two years. One of the gentlemen with whom the reporter conversed on the subject was Mr. Amos Grannis, a gentleman whose extensive knowlege of building matters entitles his opinion to consideration. "Taken all through," said the gentleman, "building material is lower than last year; but it would be hard to make any comparison of prices of any particular material at this time, because we are now just between the closing of one season and the commencement of another. Lumber, for instance, is everywhere from $1 to $3 lower than at this time last year, but where it will be in a few days it would be difficult to say. You see, those lumbermen get together, talk their business over sensibly and quietly, and when they find there is a scarcity of any particular kind of lumber they put the tariff up on it, and we have to pay the price. So that the figures asked for lumber depend very much upon the supply of the various grades. It would be just as difficult to tell you about brick, stone, lime, etc., a week or two hence. At present common brick are from $1 to $2 lower than last year. But we are now on the fag end of the old crop, and what the new will be we can only conjecture. There is little difference in the prices of stone and lime from those asked last year, and, with the exception of iron, there is little change. However, I believe that building will be less costly this year than last, for everything seems to be tending in that direction. The most potent cause of such a condition of affairs, I think, is the present strike of the bricklayers. It will tend to curtail building operations, and, in that event, material must necessarily be lower, for everybody has prepared for an unusually active season."

"Supposing the strike should end within a week, would not building operations be as active as was anticipated?"

"No, sir; not in my opinion, at least. The matter has already gone too far. It might be that some men who have given up the idea of building would begin work, but the number who would not would much reduce the aggregate of building operations."

"I believe bricklayers will be obliged to work for less wages than last year, for the same reason that I think material will be cheaper. Should the strike end today there would not be work enough for all hands, at least not for several weeks. Those people who did build, however, would profit by this, because bosses would be able to pick none but the best men. I think you will find by inquiry among contractors that my idea on this point, at least, is about correct."

The reporter found Mr. Mortimer, of Mortimer & Topper, the builders, at his office, and asked for his opinion on the same points covered in the interview with Mr. Grannis. Mr. Mortimer made about the same reply as Mr. Grannis regarding the comparative price of building material, but differed from him somewhat on the matter of wages. He said he thought if the strike ended soon building would be resumed, and it would not be long before there was great activity all over the city, which would furnish work for all bricklayers now here. It was natural, he said, in times of protracted strikes, such as the present, for strikers to leave the city in search of work, and for them to be quite slow in returning after the close of the strike. That while there might be enough building to bring the price of material up to that of last year, there would be enough to employ all bricklayers in the city and secure for them as good or better wages than last year. But should there be a very large number of workmen there would be no reason why the best men should not be employed at wages in advance of last year, for there would be great necessity for fast and good work on all of the buildings that might be begun late. It was his belief that the strike would not end for some time.

Building Operations.

There is very little to record in the building line for the last week. The feeling among architects and builders as well as those who desired to build was not a cheerful one, and the outlook was not looked upon as particularly bright. The record of permits for new structures granted by the Building Department showed the number issued during the week to be less than for the same time for many years. There were, nevertheless, quite a number of permits taken out, most of which, however, were for small structures. The only ones worthy of note issued were the following:

To Blomgren Brothers and Holdberg for four three-story flats at Nos. 456 to 462 Hurlbut street, to cost $30,000.

To R. Hitt for a three-story store and flats, 25x80 feet, at No. 254 Ogden avenue, to cost $12,000.

To J. S. Kirk for a five-story and basement brick factory, 60x90 feet, on North Water street, near Pine, to cost $25,000.

During the week ground was broken for six stores and three stories of flats at Nos. 407 to 417 North Clark street, and the work of construction will be pushed as rapidly as possible. The building will be seventy feet deep, and will be of Chicago pressed brick with stone trimmings.

Architect John Otter has now in hand the following work: A two-story and basement attic dwelling on the southeast corner of Garfield avenue and Sedgwick street for O. Vider, to cost $9,000. Two three-story and basement flats and a three-story and a batement on La Salle avenue, north of Schiller street, of Columbia and Berlin stone, for D. Donegan, to cost $30,000. A three-story flat on Schiller street west of La Salle avenue, for C. F. Julin, to cost $6,500. An apartment building on Whiting street, west of Market, for J. F. Wash, to cost $16,000. An apartment building on Sedgwick street for C. A. Helander, to cost $9,000. An apartment house at No. 15 Oak street for F. Danielson, to cost $7,500. Four three-story and basement flats on Hurlbut street, north of Centre, for Messrs. C. P. Holmberg and Blomgren Brothers, of pressed brick and stone trimmings, to cost $40,000. A pressed-brick tenement building, four stories and basement high, on the northeast corner of Sedgwick and Oak streets, for H. Rumsfeld, to cost $20,000. A three-story flat building on North Franklin street, north of Oak, for L. Braberg, to cost $7,600. Two two-story and one three-story flat buildings on Cottage Grove avenue, between Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth streets, for A. Nord, to cost $6,000. An apartment house on West Ohio street for A. Mangson, to cost $7,000. Two three-story stores and dwellings on the southeast corner of Ontario and Franklin streets for J. A. Lind, to cost $20,000.

Architect C. P. Thomas has the following new work now under way: Two stores and flats above, of pressed brick and stone trimmings, on North Clark street, near Maple, for F. F. Spencer, to cost $20,000; five stores and flats, at the southwest corner of State and Thirty-third streets, of stone and pressed brick, for Herbert Cossard, to cost $30,000; four-story apartment-house, 31x82 feet, at the northeast corner of Division street and La Salle avenue, with Queen Anne bay-windows and a very handsome entrance, for Theodore G. Springer, to cost $18,000.

P. H. Rice, three-story flats, 44x60 feet, Nos. 46 and 48 Carpenter street, $15,000.

N. C. Langlois, two two-story flats, 48x56 feet, Flourney near Hoyne, $7,000.

E. Guild, two-story addition, 19x15 feet, No. 43 North Western avenue, $500.

Elizabeth Klaner, two-story dwelling, 28x60 feet, No. 596 La Salle, $9,000.

C. J. Singer, two-story barn, 73x64 feet, Nos. 116 to 124 Lincoln avenue, $6,000.

J. Roeder, 2-story flats, 21x56 feet, No. 392 Webster avenue, $5,000.

The Market.

It would scarcely be fair to say that the real-estate market was dull during the last week, for the aggregate of transfers effected would not bear out such a statement, but the activity was not what was expected a month ago. It was hoped that as soon as tenants and landlords had ceased their dickerings, and both had retired to rest for another year, that the agents, who generally have to bear most of the blows from both sides during the renting turmoil, would be given an opportunity to attend to legitimate real-estate business. And it may be that they will as soon as matters are thoroughly settled, but the last week has not shown much of their handiwork. There have been quite a large number of transfers recorded, but only a few that would tend to arrest the attention of those who give up a portion of their time to a perusal of the real-estate column. Dealers as a rule have little complaint to make against the condition of the market, but are quite hopeful for the future. Nevertheless they say that there is a lack of disposition on the part of capitalists to come to the front to any marked degree, and that the majority of the sales are made to persons desiring permanent homes. There has as yet this spring been nothing done in a speculative way. There has been no effort to work up interest in any particular section in or out of the city, to say nothing of an attempt toward a boom, and unless some new scheme is soon developed by one or more active brains there is a chance that the market will drift along smoothly and featurelessly during the summer, and pass peacefully into the winter without having been marked by any great amount of excitement of any kind.

Booming in the Board of Trade quarter has about subsided, if it can be said such a thing ever existed, and transactions in that vicinity will hereafter be conducted without any great flourish of trumpets. Eastern parties were in the city during the week looking at some property near the new Chamber, and it is said a liberal offer was made by them for quite a large lot, but as far as could be learned negotiations were not closed. There is a belief in some minds that some holders of property in this district are much in advance of the surroundings in the matter of prices. While there is no doubt that the new Board of Trade is to be completed, and that as rapidly as possible, there is no reason to believe that the entire business of the city is to be changed. If all the office buildings that have been projected in the vicinity of the new structure are completed by the time it is there will be a much larger amount of office room thereabouts than many people may have stopped to think about. And if all of this room is occupied in a year or two years after the board is opened some far-seeing people will be surprised. They do not think that Clark, Washington, La Salle, and Dearborn streets are to be entirely deserted in a year by insurance, commission, real estate, law, and other offices. That many will leave the old quarters for new there is no doubt; but that property-owners in the vicinity of the new board will receive any such large returns for their money as is indicated by the prices asked for property yet unsold they cannot conceive. However, there is no disputing the proposition that all property in that section is good to hold, and that time will appreciate rather than depreciate the value of it, provided enough time is permitted to elapse.

Up to this time not a shovelful of dirt has been disturbed on any of the lots upon which it is said structures will be erected about the new building, and how soon operations will be begun cannot be stated. This is largely due, no doubt, to the present strike of the bricklayers, and the determination of the property owners to assist as much as possible in winning the struggle for the master-masons and builders. There is no doubt that as soon as may be work will be commenced on the new Armour, Kent, and Counselman office building, and on the fine new European hotel to be erected for Mr. McCoy, but particulars about operations on the other buildings spoken of cannot now be given.

The record of transfers for the week has shown several transactions in acres, but none of any importance. Dealers report a great deal of figuring on all sides, much of which is being done in the interest of outside capital, but they have nothing of a tangible nature to furnish. One dealer, who it may be said quietly has on one or two occasions proven himself somewhat visionary, promises within a few weeks to furnish the particulars of a revival of one of the large schemes which soiled so much blank paper during the last three years. He says that the necessary capital has been obtained, and that the enterprise, which will rival any Chicago has yet seen, will be pushed through without hindrance. THE TRIBUNE and its readers will have to wait a few days, he says, but they will surely be rewarded for their patience soon.

The Calumets' New Home.

Architecturally and artistically the new home of the Calumet Club, which was formally opened last week, is superior to any similar structure west of New York City. When the club concluded to build a new house Messrs. Burnham & Root were selected as the architects, and, what is somewhat unusual throughout the West, they were placed in full charge with permission to use their judgment as to designs and coloring in finishing, furnishing, and decorating. That the gentlemen were equal to the task is evident from the results. There has been no attempt at elaboration, but merely an effort to construct a building that would be substantial as well as pleasing to the eye. THE TRIBUNE some weeks ago printed a full description of the structure, inside and out, including the finishing and decorating. At that time, however, no furniture or hangings were in the building, and the general effect of the combined colors could not be seen, and no reference was made to that feature. And now that it has been seen a few words will suffice to dispose of it. Harmony has been the idea uppermost in the minds of the designers, and the smallest detail has received the same attention as the largest figuring. The colors that were put upon the walls and ceilings prevail in every piece of carpet and drapery to a greater or less extent, and the effect is very cheerful and pleasing. The furniture in all of the rooms is rich, but very plain, the carvings on each of the larger pieces being of the most artistic character. The rooms are nearly all very large, and although there is no great quantity of furniture in either of them there is no appearance of bareness. The general treatment of the building in the matter of decoration and furnishing is terra-cotta and other mild colors. The eye is nowhere surprised by any high coloring or novel arrangement of anything. All is subdued, but nevertheless animated and cheerful to a degree that seems almost impossible when the shades of coloring used are considered. An attractive feature of the building, and one which unfortunately is not entirely finished, is the chimney-corner at the west end of the main hall, which is constructed entirely of Chicago pressed brick. The design is handsome, and when the stained-glass window, which will be placed above it, is in position the effect will be fine. Otherwise the house is in order for the comfort of the club's members, who may justly be proud of their new quarters.

Co-operative Apartment Houses.

In the course of a somewhat lengthy, but interesting article on the coöperative apartment-house system, which has recently been quite extensively discussed in Eastern papers, the American Architect has this to say regarding the plan of operations adopted by those taking stock in such enterprises:

> While in other places such structures are erected at the cost either of some individual who rents his rooms to tenants, or of a small association of mutual acquaintances, who own the property in common, in the metropolis the whole business of securing land, raising subscriptions, and organizing the company for building is usually transacted by a single person, the promoter, as he is called, who, if he is successful in his efforts, finds compensation for his trouble either in transferring the land secured by him for the building to the association at a price somewhat higher than that which he has contracted to pay for it, or in some other way. As the promoter needs a well-digested set of plans for the future structure, in order to interest the persons whom he wishes to have as subscribers, some architect is not unfrequently joined with him in the enterprise. Subscriptions are made for definit apartments, as shown on the plans, each subscriber agreeing to pay in cash about one-quarter as much as the same accommodation would cost in a separate house, the price of the apartments being decided beforehand by a careful allotment among them of the total cost of land and building, for which estimates have been already obtained. As soon as about two-thirds of the necessary amount is subscribed, an assessment is called, and operations are begun, and at the same time certificates of stock in the association are issued to the subscribers, each one receiving an amount equal to the price of the apartment which he has agreed to take. The stockholders then elect trustees to take entire charge of the property, and each one receives from the trustees a perpetual lease of his apartment, containing the conditions as to the use of the rooms, or the behavior of their occupants, which the subscribers see fit to impose on themselves for their own protection. The subscriptions rarely represent the total value of the property, a certain portion being raised by mortgage; but one or two floors of the building are generally reserved, to be rented by the trustees for the benefit of the association, and the income from this source pays the whole or a part of the mortgage interest. Other expenses, such as the cost of heating and service, are paid by the occupants, unless it should happen, as it sometimes may, that the rentals are sufficient to cover these also. It need hardly be said that it is more economical to combine fifty or sixty houses under one roof than to build them in a row along an avenue, and the great apartment-houses certainly offer many advantages to their owners in this respect. As it happens, however, such a mode of living is now fashionable, and the subscribers have generally been rich people who wish to decorate their new houses to suit their own fancy. To meet this taste it is usual to contract for the building rather cheaply finished, and without mantels, arranging with the subscribers that changes shall be made to suit them, at a fair price, and it is easy to understand that many persons, who have money to spare, spend enough on such fittings to make the cost of their apartment considerably larger than the subscription. On the whole, however, this works to the profit of the more careful stockholders, whose dwellings gain a reflected distinction from their brilliant neighbors, and if nothing more serious is to be said against the new system its popularity will be very little affected.

Addition to the Foundlings' Home.

An addition is shortly to be made to the Foundlings' Home, which will accommodate many more waifs, and provide room that is greatly needed for the officers and employés of the institution. Messrs. W. G. Hibbard, Philip D. Armour, and Sidney Kent are to furnish the money to build the structure. The idea originated with Mr. Kent, who interested the other two gentlemen, and they, it is understood, contributed $7,500. Mr. Kent promising to give what else was necessary. Mr. Alfred Smith has drawn the plans for a substantial building, and the bids for masonry, carpenter work, etc., will be opened next week. It will have a frontage of forty feet on Ogden place and a depth of sixty feet, being connected with the home by a small wing. The hight will be four stories. Brick, with terra cotta trimmings, is to be the material, and the color will conform with that of the present structure.

The first floor will be occupied by Dr. Shipman and family, who do not now live at the home. The second and third floors will be mainly used by the nurses, and the fourth by the babies, for hospital purposes, etc. The cost will be between $20,000 and $25,000.

"We can now take care of sixty babies," said Dr. Shipman last evening, "but have only fifty-five. No more, however, will be taken unless we can get wet-nurses for them. It is useless to try to bring up babies wholesale on the bottle, as fully 60 per cent die. If fifteen are put in one room one kind of food will not agree with all. One requires hot milk, another milk not so warm; one lots of sugar, another a little salt; and so it goes. The food cannot be regulated. But with wet-nurses 10 per cent is a reasonable mortality. The first year with children is the most fatal, and the greatest number die during the first three months. The new building will accommodate only ten more babies, as we need room for the nurses and a hospital for them and for children. Our help now is crowded, and we haven't been able to get as many nurses as we wanted, as there is no place for them to sleep. Sometimes one gets sick, and she has to remain where the babies are. And it is the intention, when pregnant women come to the home, to care for them instead of sending them to a hospital. I now live in a rented house, and an office is to be provided for me in the addition, and also living-rooms for myself and family. Mr. Kent has not been to see me about it, but I understand he has the matter in charge and proposes, with others, to erect a substantial structure in harmony with the present one."

Regulating Building.

An exchange has the following reference to a proposed law which, in the light of a recent disaster in this city, should not fail to attract the attention of architects and those interested in building, to say nothing of the public legislators who might do something to their credit by adopting a similar measure:

> The provisions of the new building act now pending before the Legislature of New York are receiving much salutary discussion, and if the bill passes, as it probably will in some form, we may hope for a considerable improvement in what is already the most thorough statute of the kind in this country. Among the modifications of the present draft of the bill which are now urged, the most important is, perhaps, one which would allow the ends of girders to be built into brick walls with a simple plate under them to distribute the load, instead of the series of bond-stones which architects are now obliged to insert in the walls, at intervals of about thirty inches in hight, all the way from the foundation to the underside of the girder. The objecting builders claim, and we are inclined to think with reason, that while such bond-stones may be useful in isolated piers, they are in continuous walls not only of no service in preventing the splitting of the masonry under the pressure, but are actually injurious to the strength of the wall by reason, as we suppose, of the interruption which they cause in the bond, and of the inequality of settlement occasioned by them between the pier and the masonry on either side of it. There has always been something singular in the persistence with which the New York builders have clung to the practice of bonding brick piers with flat stones. In Boston, although they were required for a short time in the early days of the building law, their use has long been abandoned, and one who has occasion to observe the cracked and broken bond-stones which occur so frequently in New York buildings may be excused for doubting whether they are always of much value.

Hyde Park.

The market during the week was quiet if not dull, a condition which dealers ascribe to the unfavorable weather. The transfers of property within a seven-mile radius, filed for record, were slightly below the average, aggregating $28,590. The transfers on record for that part of Hyde Park outside of the seven-mile radius aggregated $39,600, making a total of $68,190. Of this sum $4,650 represented Irondale property, $4,750 South Chicago property, and $21,400 property at Grand Crossing (Cornell), where the Nickel-Plate Railway Company has recently purchased a right of way. In the matter of sales the principal point of activity appears to have been at Cornell. Following are the principal sales: 45-100ths of an acre in Lot 1, Block 61, Elizabeth G. Cornell to New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company, $4,500; Lots 24 to 32, Block 124, Cornell National Life-Insurance Company to W. K. Vanderbilt, $800; Block 123, same to New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company, $2,100; a strip 61 3-10 feet in width through Blocks 108 and 109, adjacent to the Illinois Central Railroad Company's right of way, Francis T. Sherman to same, $2,500; Lots 4 and 5, Block 61, Joshua S. Seamens to same, $600; 44-100ths of an acre in Blocks 79 and 80, Chicago Tack Company to same, $6,100; Lots 2 and 3, Block 61, Polly H. Rowan, $2,000.

William Hewitt sold to Mary Crawford for $4,000 Lots 13 and 14, Block 17, Irondale.

Nelson Thomasson sold for Gwynn Garnett several lots on Grand boulevard between Forty-first and Forty-second streets at $120 per foot, the highest figure which property in this vicinity has touched since the panic. Two elegant residences are to be built on this property.

An important auction sale of property in the Westfall tract, between Seventy-sixth and Seventy-ninth streets on the lake shore will take place May 10. Two hundred half-acre lots will be offered for sale, the purchasers receiving their deeds from J. D. Ward, Receiver of the defunct Beehive Bank, this property forming a part of the assets of that concern.

From the city limits to Hyde Park Station (Fifty-third street) property is quoted and sold at prices ranging from $75 to $125 per foot. The property where the ruins of the Hyde Park Hotel stand and the blocks to the south is not for sale, and the fourteen acres embraced in the tract is held at about $100,000. South of the tract the Illinois Central owns the land to Fifty-sixth, the beginning of the East South Park. The company has recently subdivided it, and intend to put it on the market at a high figure, ranging from $60 to $100 per foot, as it is as desirable property as any in Hyde Park Centre. The park extends south to Sixty-eighth street, and the property between that point and Seventy-first street is held by a Mr. Willard. It is not for sale, and it is stated that $3,000 per acre would be refused. The property lying between Seventy-first and Seventy-fifth streets is held by several parties who hold it at prices which practically put it out of the market. Between Seventy-fifth and Seventy-sixth streets the Goodrich Steamboat Company owns ten acres which it holds at figures in the neighborhood of $2,500 per acre.

Lake View.

During the month of April 106 transactions in real estate were recorded, representing a value of $233,367. Seventy-four building permits were also taken out, making a total of 202 for the four months of this year. The real-estate market has not been quite as brisk during the last week or two, but there is considerable property changing hands, mostly of the cheaper class. A large number of improvements of a public character are under way and active work will be commenced on them shortly.

Architect John Otter has commenced the construction of a fine two-story and basement frame residence, 55 by 32 feet, for himself on the northeast corner of Wellington avenue and Halsted street, to cost $5,000. The same architect is also building in Lake View a two-story and cellar frame residence for N. Nelson.

Lake.

The principal sale of the week was a lot on Wentworth avenue, between Forty-first and Fortieth streets, west front, 395x469 feet, estate of Martin Andrews to Augustus Bryam, $12,000.

NEVER AGAIN.

For The Chicago Tribune.

How dark and lone!
How in the moonlight glitters here
Each white gravestone!

How break the waves anear my feet!
How sad thy moan!
All Nature seems to mourn with me
Thy presence flown.

O mid Life's storms I loud have called
On thee in vain;
Only the winds made mocking cry,
"Never again!"

I try to teach my breaking heart
Their sad refrain;
For in this life thou'lt answer me
Never again.

O, after deeds all nobly wrought,
Sweet be thy rest!
Then, tho' without thee life is naught,
Dearest and best,

Still will I not disturb thy sleep
By loud refrain,
E'en tho' the mocking winds repeat,
"Never again!"

There is a balm to heal each smart—
Hope is not vain;
There is a land where, heart to heart,
Loved ones, here severed, meet to part
Never again.

REAL-ESTATE NOTES.

Attractive Locations—New Subdivisions—What the Outlook Promises.

In a Recent Visit to the Offices of Some of the Prominent Real-Estate Dealers of Chicago.

E. S. DREYER & CO.,

No. 88 Washington street, were called upon for an expression of their views on the real-estate outlook during the coming season. From them it was learned that the market has shown a much increased activity during the last few weeks, owing in a great degree to the advent of fine weather, while the prospect for the fall trade is still more promising. The firm during the last year sold a large amount of property, being particularly successful in laying out large subdivisions. One of these specially worthy of mention is a large tract of land at Fifty-second and Halsted streets, which they have recently subdivided. The property possesses the advantages of lake water and good sidewalks and is accessible by street-cars which run on Halsted to Fifty-fifth street. They have also a number of subdivisions around Chicago accessible by street-cars and just outside the city and fire limits where frame houses may be built. Mr. Dreyer said he never was more hopeful, and stated that they had sold fine improved properties in order to purchase outlying tracts, such as are referred to above, to meet the growing demand for this class of property.

THE NEW LUMBER DISTRICT

lying on the river between Thirty-fifth and Thirty-ninth streets and Laurel streets and Ashland avenue has become a scene of great activity. Mr. John A. Yale, 153 La Salle street, who is agent for the Robbins estate, in which this district is included, makes a most flattering report of this class of real estate. Within the last eighteen months nearly 5,000 feet of dock has been built and occupied and railroad tracks laid, giving it direct communication with all the railroads in the city and as many side-tracks and switches as required. The lots are of a splendid depth (350 to 450 feet) and especially adapted to the requirements of the lumber trade. The Chicago Lumber Company, G. W. Hinckley & Co., Bigelow Bros., Babcock & Park, Adams & Lord, Wyatt, Wells & White, the B. L. Anderson Company, Bishop & Fox, and others are already located there, forming the nucleus of the new lumber district. It also offers for a thousand different industries. In this connection, Mr. Yale also mentioned the territory bounded by Division street, North avenue, Halsted street, and the river, which is intersected by the North Branch Canal and possesses fine railroad facilities, being in direct communication with the Milwaukee & St. Paul and the new Evanston Railroad, which runs along its Hawthorn avenue frontage for a distance of half a mile. This property, which can be purchased on most favorable terms, is rapidly coming into demand, being in the heart of the city and offering, as it does, superior advantages for dock and manufacturing purposes, a number of important manufactories being already located there.

MANUFACTURING SITES

N. M. BLOOMENTHAL & CO.

were seen at their new quarters, Rooms 6 and 8, No. 86 Washington street. Referring to the condition of the real-estate market, Mr. B. said the demand was good, particularly for properties ranging from $5,000 to $20,000, but sales were few, as owners were more apt to mark up than cut down their prices. The prospect for the fall trade he considered most encouraging.

BLAINE'S BIRTHPLACE.

Some Reminiscences of the Spot by Eli Perkins.

DU BOIS, Pa., May 4.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—"Right over there across the Monongahela," said the Lecture Committee, pointing across the river from Brownsville, Pa., "right over there in that red brick house Jim Blaine was born, and right over there in that Catholic cemetery Jim Blaine's mother lies buried."

Brownsville is one of those finished old towns like Beardstown, only it is on the Monongahela River, in Pennsylvania. It is sixty miles southeast from Pittsburg. Before the railroads came these river towns were great shipping points. Now they are dead or only sustained by the coke interests. Recently Vanderbilt has been projecting railroads down here, and coal lands have advanced. The vein here is nine feet thick, and old farmers who have worked all their lives on land worth $10 to $25 an acre suddenly find their lands worth $300. The great National pike ran through here, built sixty years ago, and at Brownsville is the first iron bridge put up in this part of the country. It is a tubular arch and has stood sixty years without paint or repair, and will stand 500 years more.

"Does Mr. Blaine come here often?" I asked.

"Yes, quite often. He has a hundred thousand dollars' worth of coal lands between here and Pittsburg, and he often comes here to see his old friends and look after his interests. Last summer he came and put up a monument to his mother."

"Who was Blaine's mother?"

"She was a daughter of old Neil Gillespie, who used to live over there too. His father was old Squire Ephraim Blaine, and a strong old man he was too."

"What did Blaine's father do?" I asked old Deacon Poff, a farmer 84 years old.

"What did Eph Blaine do?" replied the old man, "why Eph didn't do nuthin'. He was a big bug. Eph was always looking after big things. When they built the great National pike through Uniontown, Brownsville, and on to Wheeling and Indianapolis, Eph was one of the contractors. He took great contracts and sublet 'em. He got very rich for this country and built that double brick house where Jim Blaine was born. Do I know Jim? I should say I do. I had to dog him out of my orchard more than once. He was always a leader among the boys here, but he never led them into any mean things. He wouldn't rob hens' nests, but he would get the boys to ride on rafts or cross the river on cakes of ice."

"Then Mr. Blaine's mother was a Catholic?"

"Yes; very strong, too. But old 'Squire Blaine didn't trouble her. He let her run the girls, and the boys he taught to think for themselves. The 'Squire was a believer in Christianity, and a professor, too; but he was quite liberal. He had good sound sense. A Protestant who can live with a Catholic wife all his life and never have any trouble must have good sense. 'Where did Blaine go to school?' Why, right here in Brownsville till he got old enough to go to college over at Washington, where they have the cremating furnace. Jim Blaine graduated there, and then he went to Kentucky to teach school. At Lexington, Ky., Jim met his wife, a shrewd, earnest teacher from Maine—a woman of force and character. She had force enough to draw Blaine away from Pennsylvania and up into Maine, where he made himself famous.

"Yes, Blaine came from good stock, as good as there was in this part of the country at that time. Old Neil Gillespie, Blaine's wife's father, was a good deal of a speculator. He occasionally shipwrecked himself. He wasn't a 'big bug' like old Lyman Blaine," said the Deacon. "He hadn't enough in him to make him big, but he was a hard-working, honest man. I reckon the biggest thing old Neil Gillespie ever did he couldn't help doin'."

"What was that?" I asked.

"Why he couldn't hinder his daughter from marrying Eph Blaine, and he couldn't hinder their havin' Jim." ELI PERKINS.

YOU AND I.

For The Chicago Tribune.

'Tis years ago since you and I,
One sunny day in Summer-weather,
Stood where the fair Lee rippled by
Thro' flowery meads and wavy heather,
And pledged each other, heart and hand,
Thro' all the future years, then bringing
Fair visions of a promised land,
While roundelays the birds were singing.
O soft the strains,
The sweet refrains,
Of Love, that day we roamed together!

Alas! those days have gone and flown,
I've drank the dregs of Fortune's chalice,
And shattered is my golden throne,
And lowly lies my stately palace,
While ghost-like, thro' those aisles of years
There's nothing left to me but tears
To give my poor heart [illegible] greeting.
With bitter strains
And fierce refrains
Of broken vows and human malice.

THE TURF.

What Secretary Hall Saw and Learned on His Recent Trip.

The Kentucky Derby Candidates and Their Chances—Checkmate and Thora Considered Out of the Cup.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 4.—[Special Correspondence.]—The spring races are just now subjects of paramount interest with all true Kentuckians, every one of whom loves a well-bred horse, and nearly every one of whom will at a race back his favorit for a liberal portion of his assets. Hence the Kentucky Derby, which in this section one must be scrupulously careful to pronounce "Darby," or invite the contempt of every intelligent turfman, and which will be run two weeks from next Tuesday, by common consent takes precedence over all other topics that engage the Kentucky mind. The training of about 150 horses at the track, and the prospective arrival of nearly as many more, serve to stimulate an active consideration of racing problems, and particularly that of the Derby. "Who will win the Derby?" is a question frequently asked, often by some turf oracle who is eager to air his views of the chances of the probable starters, and occasionally by a serious person who contemplates investing a hundred or two on the result. The probable starters as closely as can be calculated at the present time are:

R. C. Pate's b. g. Ascender, by imp. Buckden, dam Ascension.

R. C. Pate's b. c. Bondholder, by imp. Bonny Scotland, dam Glentine.

Mrs. Hunt Reynolds' b. c. Chatter, by Whisper, dam Clarina.

J. Carter & Co.'s b. g. Monticello, by Monarchist, dam Boniform.

B. G. Thomas' ch. f. Queen Ban, by King Ban, dam War Reel.

J. R. McKee's ch. c. Cardinal McCloskey, by Ten Broeck, dam Waterwitch.

Mr. Bernard's ch. f. Pike's Pride, by King Ban, dam Lou Pike.

J. & J. Swigert have two, the b. c. Worth, by King Ban, dam Modiste, and the b. c. Carlisle, by Ten Broeck, dam Nelly Brady, one of which will be started.

Out of this list there are but two that are today in racing form, Drake Carter and Monticello, both of whom were trained South, and have run at New Orleans and Memphis, the former proving a grand colt, and the latter quite his inferior. The horses that wintered in Kentucky have had an unfavorable spring to contend with and are quite backward in their preparation. A great deal, however, has been accomplished with them in the last week, which has furnished the only continuously fine weather of the season, and Bondholder, Leonatus, Cardinal McCloskey, Queen Ban, Lord Raglan, and Hailfellow, which start at Lexington next week, are now in fair condition. Upon the strength of his public form Drake Carter is properly a prime favorit. He will start in the blue ribbon at Lexington, if it is run on a good day and track, in which event he will meet, amongst others, Leonatus, Cardinal McCloskey, and Hailfellow. Success there will cause long odds to rule upon him when he comes to the post for the Derby. Green Morris says: "I don't care whether they make him first or last choice. I have backed him for all that I cared to. If he wins I will be thankful, and if he loses I will lose all that I can afford to."

The Pate stable will start both Ascender and Bondholder if both are right. As Ascender has been backed by Mr. Pate to win a large stake, he will be specially prepared for the event. The cognoscenti do not fancy Ascender, who is tall and slender, the general opinion being that he cannot stay the route. Nevertheless he is a vigorous feeder, takes his exercise regularly, not having missed a gallop this season when any of his companions were worked, and has the very best of dispositions. His trainer, Ed Brown, familiarly known as "Brown Dick," a very careful and competent man says: "He is a tough horse. He don't carry much flesh, but don't need it, as he is strong without looking big. Last year I ran him eleven races. He was first in eight, and second in the other three, and half the time while he was winning there was an excuse for his not starting. The horse that beats him will have to run a good race." Ascender will not start until the Derby, and is consequently being worked gradually but steadily. The best move he has yet made has been a mile and repeat in 1:50, 1:48. Bondholder will start in the Distillery Stakes, at Lexington, where an idea of his form may be obtained. He is a stout little fellow, only fifteen-one hands high, full of energy and strength, and has an attractive way of going. Davy Johnson, the sensational young bookmaker from New York, watched him at work one morning, and straightway closed Watts', Hughes', and Cathcart's book on him, getting odds of 25 and 10 to 1.

Leonatus is doing well. He is a colt of grand size and substance, and apparently considerable speed. His first move was a mile and a quarter in 2:19. A few days later he covered the same distance in 2:14, doing the final mile in 1:45½, one quarter in 25, and finished strong. Reports from Lexington indicate that Cardinal McCloskey has fully recovered from his winter attack of lung-fever, and, though he has not grown a particle, and is but little over fifteen hands high and otherwise delicately built, he romps miles with his shoes on in 1:45½. Alongside of Lord Raglan he is a pony. Lord Raglan, notwithstanding gossip to the contrary, is doing well. A mile in 1:49, an easy gallop, is the best that has been heard from him. Yet there are persons who predict that the horse that beats him will be the winner of the Derby. Mysterious stories are in circulation concerning the speed of Harper's Hailfellow and Maj. Thomas' Queen Ban, but beyond that both are in good health nothing authentic can be obtained. The trainers do not appear to fear Queen Ban. Her speed is conceded to be very great, but she is not given credit for staying qualities. Mrs. Hunt Reynolds' Chatter is considered good, still not dangerous.

The performances of Checkmate and Thora at Nashville have not pleased their backers. Thora was reported to be doing remarkably well in her work at Nashville, while it was notorious that Checkmate was not doing well here before he left, and there was no good reason to regard him as the probable winner of any of the spring events. Nevertheless he was backed heavily last night and today on the strength of an alleged private trial, the real merit of which was known only to his owner, trainer, and a select few. When Pearl Jennings vanquished him doubts arose as to the reliability of that private trial.

The prominent Cup horses as canvassed today are Apollo, Boatman, John Davis, and Lida Stanhope, with Freeland and Wildmoor held in respectful esteem. Neither Thora nor Checkmate are considered good enough to win it. If they prove to be their Nashville form will have to be bettered to a great degree.

The stable of Mr. R. C. Pate is the most extensive and most important at the track, having twenty horses in training, among them such distinguished performers as Boatman, Monogram, Ascender, Bondholder, and Vera, together with Baccarat and Ten Eyck, green 3-year-olds, and the finest lot of 2-year-olds that have been stable companions in years. Embargo, by Enquirer, dam Fanny Mattingly, is by many rated the grandest 2-year-old that they have ever seen. He looks more like a 3-year-old Derby-winner than an untried youngster. Ten Eyck, by Ten Broeck, dam Cynthia Sue, is a 3-year-old gelding that has never started, but who looks very racing-like and glides over the ground like a bird skimming through the air.

A pair that attracted marked attention among all of the Louisville track are Aztec by Aramis, dam Dora, and Aretino by Aramis, dam Sprightly. They were bred and are owned by S. Powers & Son, of Decatur, Ill. Aztec's races at Memphis caused him to be rated the best 3-year-old of the season by those who witnessed the performances, particularly the mile and a half in 2:39¾, in which he defeated Ballast, Apollo, and others. The stable thinks there is little choice between Aztec and Aretino. Either strongly exemplifies the fact that first-class race-horses can be bred in Illinois.

Secretary Hall on the Kentucky Trotters.

D. L. Hall, Secretary of the Chicago Driving Park, returned home a few days ago from a visit to Kentucky, and while in Cincinnati was interviewed by an Enquirer reporter, and, as he furnished some interesting news concerning the trotters in Kentucky, the article is reproduced as follows:

Mr. D. L. Hall, the energetic Secretary of that most enterprising body, the Chicago Driving Park, was in the city yesterday, on his way home from a trip through Kentucky. The Chicago Driving Park today stands at the head of all trotting and running associations, in that it gives more money than any of the others. Mr. Hall is the recognized backbone of the club, and for originality of stakes and purses he certainly surpasses all other Secretaries. In appearance he is about the last man one would take for a horseman. He sports a mustache and goatee of rather reddish hue, and dresses plainly but tastefully. With an Enquirer reporter he talked as follows:

"We have thirty-one days of trotting and running, for which we agree to give an aggregate of $110,000. This does not take into consideration special purses for the running meeting. Sixty thousand of this amount is for the trotters. Our trotting meeting begins July 14 and lasts till the 18th, and the running from June 23 to July 4. For the latter we have seventeen stakes. There will be five races for eight days and nine on the Fourth of July, and, of course, we will have extra contests. You see there is one feature about Chicago races in which they differ from all others. When the horses come to our city from Louisville and Lexington they then meet the Western delegation—that is, those from California, Iowa, Wisconsin, etc."

"How are matters over in Kentucky?"

"They have a lot of good trotters at Louisville. I suppose the fastest two over there are the great 5-year-olds Bronze and Jay Eye See. Both are looking finely, but I think the former is the best-appearing trotter at that track. Then there are Charlie Ford, the pacer Flora Belle, Ewing, John R., Mattie Graham, Lillian, Rigolette, Lady Thorne, Ed Geers, J. B. Thomas, Novelty, St. Remo, Tony Newell, the pacer Bessie M., and many others.

"There is a very promising pacer at that city named Richball, who promises to make matters warm for the free-for-all side-wheelers this summer. Jack Haverly's Troubadour, record 2:19¼, is also at that track, and is being put in shape by the only and original Jim Dustin. At Lexington I found Frank Van Ness, who has quite a string. Much to my surprise I learned that Frank was training once more the famous old pacer Sleepy Tom. Frank says that old Tom will be as fast as ever. He also asserts that he has brought back to her form the mare Hattie Woodward, record 2:15½. Van Ness believes that he will startle some of the trotters this season with her."

During the afternoon Mr. Hall visited Chester Park and saw Maud S. at work. She went a mile at a 2:25 clip with the greatest of ease, and he said that he never knew her to be in better condition. The California horses were still in their stables, having not recovered fully from their long trip.

Capt. George N. Stone, Mr. Hall, and Mr. John Sullivan were conversing in regard to turf matters in general, when the subject of a meeting between Maud S. and St. Julien was broached. Neither believed that there was a possibility of their being brought together, but, said Capt. Stone: "I'll tell you that it would pay a man to buy Maud, if such a thing could be done, and arrange a series of races between the two. Suppose there were three contests, one mile heats in harness, another mile heats to wagon, and a third two-mile heats, all trotted in different cities. Why, it would be worth $300,000 to the owners of those great flyers. Every lover of horse-flesh from Maine to California would go hundreds of miles to witness such a match, as they would be the greatest battles this country ever saw."

Mr. Hall acquiesced, and said that Chicago alone would give a sum that he could not at present estimate. "I know that if they met all records would be knocked sky high, and that it would be years before such a turf event would be looked upon in America. One could not aggregate the crowds that would certainly assemble to see them trot."

Mr. Sullivan thought that the only possible way the two could ever be matched would be by St. Julien beating Maud's record. "I don't suppose that even then they would trot against each other, but I think Vanderbilt would allow his mare to try and redeem herself. But it would be a grand contest to see them go against each other." He believed that it would be quiet a feature for some driving club to offer a liberal purse for St. Julien to trot in 2:10 or 2:09. Then they could find out what Vanderbilt would do with his Queen.

Local Notes and Gossip.

Budd Doble is back from Lexington. He reports Monroe Chief in fine shape, although the old horse has not been started up this season.

Two additional entries were received for the 2:21 race by Secretary Hall yesterday: Joe Bunker, by George Wilkes, dam by American Star, and Rocket, by Greeley.

The following horses have declared out of the Board of Trade Handicap: Black Prince, John Davis, Boz Sedam, Aristocrat, Electrical, Mediator, George McCullough, Morgan Spy.

Dan Reardon has quite a stable of trotters and pacers at the Driving Park, most of them having been purchased in Tennessee during the last winter. Thomas R., a 4-year-old chestnut gelding by Scott's Thomas, that is already very fast, is at the head of the string, and besides him there is a half brother to Mattie Hunter and Lady Almont, a brown filly by Mambrino Thorne (son of Mambrino Patchen) out of Ripple, by Almont.

The full list of entries to the Chicago trotting meeting was given in yesterday's TRIBUNE, there being 276 nominations, divided as follows: 2:19 class, 11; 2:40 class, 28; 4-year-old race, 24; 2:23 class, 13; 2:27 class, 20; 2:30 pacers, 20; 2:17 class, 5; free-for-all pacing, 12; 2:30 class, 24; 2:21 class, 11; 2:25 class, 12; three-minute class, 29; 2:20 pacers, 14; 2:35 class, 19; 5-year-old race, 7; 3-year-old race, 25; 2:14 class, 2. The last-named class was the only one that did not fill.

Contrary to general expectation, Piedmont was not entered in any of the races at the Chicago trotting meeting, although he will doubtless come on from California with the other members of the Stanford stable. Had there been a stallion purse given here Piedmont would probably have entered, but his owner is understood to have no desire to pit him against anything but entire horses. Piedmont's feet, which were always a trifle shaky, have grown out nicely since he left here, and are now in perfect shape. Should there be no free-for-all stallion race given through the central circuit, he will probably be shaped up for a trial at Hartford against the best stallion record—2:13¾.

Mr. George Brasfield returned from a visit to Lexington Friday and reports the trotters at that place as doing well. France's Alexander, now in the stable of Frank Van Ness, was moved a mile the other morning in 2:26, the last quarter being trotted in thirty-five seconds. He is being driven this year without weights, but the change does not seem to have been a complete success, as his action forward has been somewhat shortened, making him rather chop-gaited. Harry Wilkes, that is entered in the 2:23 and 2:21 classes at the Chicago meeting, is considered by Lexington horsemen to be about the best piece of goods in that country. He could certainly beat 2:20 last year, but as he never met a horse that could carry him a mile at his best dip, the question of whether or not he will stay the route is an open one, especially as his dam, Mollie Walker, is also the dam of Gen. Garfield, record 2:21, that was one of the worst quitters ever known.

Speaking of Cardinal McCloskey's chances for the Kentucky Derby, Mr. B. G. Bruce is reported as having said: "Imogene, I understand, ran away from him the other day with the greatest ease, and you know she's no good on earth."

Already the followers of performances are becoming puzzled by the changing of names of race-horses down South. The system has grown into a gross abuse, and will not be rectified until the rule be passed that, for a whole year after change of title, a horse shall be described by every name it has been entered under during that period.

Clingstone, William H., and the other trotters belonging to Mr. W. J. Gordon, of Cleveland, will not take part in any of the early meetings, the intention being to have them stay at home until the meeting there, although William H. and Clemmie G. may be entered at Chicago. Mr. Gordon says he will never again start Clingstone in a race against more than one horse.

Soon after the sale of Jerome Eddy for $25,000 by Messrs. Dewey & Stewart the senior member of the firm visited Kentucky for the purpose of securing a suitable successor to the son of Louis Napoleon. This he secured in the 2-year-old colt Furor (full brother to Fugue), by King René, dam Fuga by George Wilkes; her dam Betsy Trotwood by Clark Chief. The price paid for Furor was $3,500 cash, and the bay mare Lena Mapes (full sister to Jerome Eddy), 7 years old. Furor was purchased from his breeder, Maj. H. C. McDowell, and is one of the best-bred young stallions in the country, besides coming of a family that trots, as his sister Fuga is one of the fastest of her age in the country.—Breeders' Gazette.

RELIGIOUS.

The League of the Cross, and the Objects It Aims At.

Interference with Ritualistic Services in an English Church.

The League of the Cross—Its Work in the Archdiocese of Chicago.

The newly-organized Total Abstinence Union of the Archdiocese of Chicago, whose work, especially on the West Side, has been reported at length in THE TRIBUNE of late, has issued a circular to the clergy, officers, members, and friends of the organization, setting forth, among other things, the evil and extent of intemperance and the remedy which should be applied. The constitution and by-laws of the new Archdiocesan Union have been approved and blessed by Archbishop Feehan. Its objects are:

1. By united action to promote the cause of total abstinence. 2. To establish and maintain total abstinence societies in every parish in the archdiocese. 3. To develop a broad spirit of coöperation and friendly intercourse among such societies. 4. By means of public meetings, addresses, and the dissemination of documents, to enlist the sympathies and practical aid of those who do not belong to our movement. And the means to accomplish these declared objects are prayer, the practice of our holy religion, and the observance of the rules and regulations laid down by the reverend clergy for the guidance of local societies.

The concentration of the powers and energies of all the local societies into one supreme head—the first essential of organization, of strength, and of effectual work; the greater facilities of establishing societies in every parish of the archdiocese; the developing of the broad spirit of coöperation among the total-abstinence men; the convention of the Presidents of local societies to take counsel and exchange views; the prominence given to the movement by immense gatherings or meetings; the monthly visits of county directors to all the societies in their respective counties and their reports thereon to the union—these are advantages peculiar to the union. The success of the union, even in its brief existence, has been beyond the most sanguine expectation. No total abstinence society in the Archdiocese has so far signified its unwillingness to join the union. Its officers have received words of cheer and encouragement from all sides. Numerous letters expressing the warmest sympathy with the objects of the union, and wishing it every blessing and success, have been received by the Secretary. One clergyman writes: "It will afford me pleasure to be able to aid a good cause that contributes so much to the spiritual and temporal well-being of our Catholic population," and another says: "I can see no reason why any total abstinence society in the diocese should not seek admission," while another declares: "I am confident that it will be the means of advancing the cause of temperance, if it receives its merited support." The union thus begins under the happiest auspices. The next convention of the union will be held on the second Sunday of July, and an invitation is extended to every society in the archdiocese to send three delegates. Due notice of the place and hour of meeting will be given.

Pious Pugilism—Ritualistic Services in an English Church End in an Animated Row.

They have ritualistic disturbances of a more or less excited character somewhere in England nearly every Sunday. On a recent Monday a rather unusually lively scene occurred at St. Matthew's Church, Sheffield, of which the Rev. G. C. Ommaney, a High Church clergyman, is the vicar. It has been the practice since Mr. Ommaney went to Sheffield to have an acolyte within the communion railing during the celebration of the communion. Sunday Mr. Wynn, the parish Warden, gave him notice that he should take steps to prevent an acolyte entering within the railings, and for that purpose he attended the church at half-past 7 Monday morning, the time announced for early communion. The service was, however, begun five minutes earlier, and when Mr. Wynn arrived he found an acolyte within the rails and the service proceeding. At its close the vicar was about to hand the cup to the acolyte to wash it out, when Mr. Wynn interposed between them, seized the acolyte by the wrist, and prevented his taking the cup. The vicar then beckoned to two members of the congregation for the purpose of ejecting Mr. Wynn, and they rushed toward the communion-table, but he dared them to touch him, observing that he was a church Warden and that he was there in the discharge of his duty. While this was going on the vicar passed the cup to the acolyte, and the other vessels were carried by him into the vestry. The vicar and Mr. Wynn followed. There an altercation took place between them, in the course of which the vicar told Mr. Wynn that he had no right in the vestry, and ordered him to leave. He refused, and the vicar then attempted to push him out. In the struggle the vicar was sent with considerable force against a door, the crash of which could be heard all over the church, and Mr. Wynn's hand was cut with a decanter which contained communion wine.

Frances E. Willard has had a cordial reception in California. The Mayor of Los Angeles, her first stopping-place on golden soil, welcomed her on behalf of the town; the clergy, on behalf of the churches; the Good Templars, for the Grand Lodge of the State; and the women of the W. C. T. U. came 500 miles to offer their welcome.

[Spurgeon.]—"How many years have I stood in this place and preached to congregations just like this, Sabbath after Sabbath, morning and evening? Now, suppose I had preached on some scientific subject, I should have been spun out a long time ago. If I had any other doctrine to preach than Christ crucified I should have scattered my congregations to the winds of heaven."

The Standard says: Few will deny the statement that liberalism has crept into the majority of our churches to such an extent as to make the old land-marks which formerly divided the church from the world almost, and in some cases entirely, invisible. The innovations have been gradual, it is true, but none the less perceptible, until the purity of the early church seems to be receding. When fairs, and bazaars, and theatricals are resorted to in order to raise money to carry on the Lord's work, may we not ask if we are not drifting far away from the old land-marks of Christian uprightness and high endeavor, and is there not need that reform should begin in the house of the Lord?

The annual meeting of the Chicago Congregational Association will be held at the Lincoln Park Church on Tuesday and Wednesday. Topics relating to the family and the home will receive the attention of the speakers.

At a meeting of the Episcopal Church Congress a few months ago one of the speakers, the Rev. J. L. Tucker, of Jackson, Miss., created a sensation by saying that the moral and spiritual condition of the negro race in the South is deplorable, and that even their religion is "unconscious hypocrisy." He has since written a book entitled: "The Relations of the Church to the Colored Race," in which he reiterates his statements and adduces facts to prove them.

The Russian Holy Synod, in answer to the proposal of the Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church for spiritual intercommunication between the two churches, especially in Alaska, says that while the Synod is anxious to promote fraternal love and tolerance in its intercourse with the Protestant Episcopal Church, it cannot entertain the request for "a reciprocal participation in the solemn performance of the sacrament." The Synod "considers a previous agreement in faith as peremptorily indispensable before the practical mutual participation in the sacraments, inasmuch as the first is the only possible groundwork or basis for the last."

The material out of which the "average" minister is made is a young man, with such an amount of personal religion as the average church member possesses. He desires to do good, thinks the ministry opens the way to usefulness, and perhaps believes he is specially "called" to it. He studies in college and seminary, becomes engaged to a young lady, feels that he never can settle himself down to real work till she is at his side as his wife, and therefore even before he is married shows how truly Paul said: "He that is married careth for the things that are of the world, how he may please his wife," and every idea of usefulness in the ministry is subordinated to the one thought of whether there is such salary within his reach that he can venture on matrimony.

Dr. R. S. Strother, of Bardstown, delivered a lecture at the court-house last week, says the Lebanon (Va.) Standard, on the "Ancient History of America, Mound-Builders, and the Garden of Eden." On these subjects he claims to have important and exclusive information. He has discovered, he says, and can prove to the satisfaction of any impartial person that the Garden of Eden was situated in the Valley of the Mississippi. The four rivers which, according to the second chapter of Genesis, compassed it about he explains as follows: The Pison is the Arkansas coming from Colorado, or "the land of Havilah, where there is gold"; the Gihon is the Ohio, "which compasses the land of Ethiopia," or, in other words, forms the boundary of the late slave States, where the negroes principally reside; the Hiddekel is the Missouri, and the Euphrates the Upper Mississippi.

Says a religious paper: Rector Heber Newton, of New York, who has, as he thinks, been preaching the sand from under the Bible, is not to be tried for heresy. His accusers decline to go into the merits of his reasonings. They say that he covenanted to preach from the Bible, not at it; and as he does not intend to stand to his contract, they wish to have it cancelled. That is a plain proposition which people can understand. It spoils the martyr business, and punctures the soap-bubble which he chooses to regard as the sphere of religious liberty. They propose to take him out of the cage, perch him upon a finger, and let him fly into the boundless realms of space—give him full religious liberty. A curious bird of freedom is that Mr. Newton. He pecks and bites the hand of those who wish to liberate him, and he is the last bird in the world to mount up—with the exulting song: "I am free! I am free! I return no more!"

In the April number of the Nineteenth Century Cardinal Manning returns to the question of education, and asks, "Is the Christianity of England worth preserving?" He is not satisfied with the answer of Mr. Dale, given in the March number. He still maintains that the working of the Education act of 1870 is unequal and therefore unjust; that the injustice ought to be redressed; that all who pay the school rate should share in it; that all who share the rate ought to obtain the aid of the State by voluntary efforts; and that for the residual cases of absolute poverty the Government of the country should make adequate provision out of the public funds. Mr. Dale, he holds, has not shaken any of these propositions. Mr. Dale undoubtedly thinks differently. The Cardinal's contention is that English Christianity is in danger. Until the act of 1870 the schools of England were Christian schools; but by that act the Christian population of England has been launched on an inclined plane. Its future descent, he thinks, is certain if not properly and adequately checked.

The Independent is strongly in favor of using the revised version of the Bible in church, and puts the matter in this way: "The proper question should be whether a minister has a right to use any other than the revised version of the New Testament. We hold that he has not. We hold that it is wrong to use the common version when the revised version can be had for 15 cents. It is a question simply of loyalty and reverence for God's inspired Word. Here are two accessible versions, one made from a comparatively imperfect text by the inexact scholarship of over two centuries ago; the other made from a carefully studied text, by the much nicer scholarship of today, and by a more imposing body of scholars. Which version best represents the inspired original is not a question in dispute. It is agreed, by all whose opinion is worth considering, that, barring some points of mere English style, the new version is a very great advance on the old. That being the case, one who uses in worship the old does, to the extent of the differences between the two, disguise and conceal the Bible from his congregation. He reads what is not God's Word when he can read what is His Word. He reads in many passages wrong sense or nonsense, in place of good sense. He does this because he gives King James' revisers the reverence which belongs only to the Holy Spirit."

REFORMED CATHOLIC PRIESTS.

The temporary Independent Catholic Church, 300 Clark street, was yesterday morning the scene of the first ordination of priests for that church in the City of Chicago. Messrs. Richard H. Moloney, Stephen Lovitt Magrath, and Robert Johnson were ordained priests by Bishop McNamara, with complete profession of scriptural faith, and in strict conformity with the requirements of the New Testament. They will be appointed to charges in a few days. Father Moloney is a native of Tipperary, Father Magrath hails from Tyrone, Ireland, and Father Johnson is a typical American colored man, educated in the Fisk University at Nashville, Tenn. Today this newly-ordained colored priest will ride in Bishop McNamara's gospel carriage, clothed in priestly robes, and will preach the sermon of the day at the corner of State and Madison streets at 12:30 o'clock. He will be introduced by the reformed Bishop, who takes especial delight in presenting to the people the first negro priest ever ordained in America.

Pious Smiles.

[Boston Globe.]—The Rev. Joseph Cook has been dined in Chicago. Dined and "wined," probably.

It took young Parsonby all aback, when at the theatre the other evening, he whispered to his girl that he guessed he would step out a moment to take the air, and she quickly responded, "It is very oppressive, George; I'll go out with you." They did not go out, however.

A visitor in the country seeing a very old woman dozing at her cottage door asks a little boy of 6 or 7, who happens to be playing near by, how old she is, "I can't say, sir," replies the child, politely; "but she must be very old. She has been here ever since I can remember."

That Irishman had a correct appreciation of the fitness of things who, being asked by the Judge when he applied for a license to sell whisky, if he was of good moral character, replied, "Faith, yer Honor, I don't see the necessity of a good moral character to sell whisky."

A colored brother in this city, when questioned recently with regard to the spiritual condition of his church, spoke most enthusiastically of its growth. "Had any conversions?" continued the interrogator. "Better than that, better than that," replied the brother; "since our new minister began preaching for us all the disinfected ones are coming back."

There was a small collection of Methodists in Pennsylvania so sensitive in their perfection that in using the Lord's prayer they omitted the clause, "Forgive us our trespasses," because it implied a confession of faults. But the Christian Advocate relates that when the leader of the society left his wife and ran away with a young woman who had been especially prominent in refusing to repeat the prayer except in the altered form, the clique speedily broke up.

"We've caught one reporter in the net," said Capt. Hall of the Salvation Army, "and we're after another one now. We want the reporters and policemen converted. Now, if there aren't any more, we'll close the meeting, but I'd like to see the reporters make a start. Why don't you come along to the fountain, you two reporters?" she inquired, eyeing the Standard reporter and a gentleman connected with an evening paper. The reporters did not go to the fountain and the meeting then closed with a benediction.

SEVEN BAD DAYS.

What Used Up Tom Farmer's Time and Money—He Adopts a Wiser Method.

"Why, Farmer, old boy, you look like your own ghost revisiting the glimpses of the moon. Where have you been for the past week, and what's the matter with you?"

Tom Farmer was a bookkeeper in a large New York publishing house, and is yet, for Tom is a bona-fide character, with a post-office address and a name in the City Directory. He is a hard-working fellow, drinks a little, and is occasionally careless in his habits.

"I've been at home, that's where I've been," responded Tom, wearily, dropping into his old seat, "under the doctor and the dyspepsia, a mighty tough time I've had of it."

"Seems to me," said correspondent James Quinn, shuffling the morning's mail like a pack of whist cards, "that you might be able to find something to straighten out that stomach of yours. It's no more of [illegible] sound stomachs [illegible] with meat at [illegible] cents a pound."

There sat poor Tom, with pale, thin, haggard face, no appetite, no pleasure, nauseated stomach—ambitionless, hopeless—and yet with the awful necessity upon him of earning the daily bread which, after he had earned it, his disease forbade him to enjoy.

"Tom," said the gray-haired head of his department, "take a word of advice from a man that's been there. Leave off stimulants and quack stuff, and pay twenty-five cents for one of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS, put it on your stomach, take care of yourself, and you'll be a well man yet. I've tried it and I know."

This was a year ago. Tom tried it and hasn't lost a day in the last six months.

Ladies

Do you want a pure, blooming Complexion? If so, a few applications of Hagan's MAGNOLIA BALM will gratify you to your heart's content. It does away with Sallowness, Redness, Pimples, Blotches, and all diseases and imperfections of the skin. It overcomes the flushed appearance of heat, fatigue and excitement. It makes a lady of THIRTY appear but TWENTY; and so natural, gradual, and perfect are its effects, that it is impossible to detect its application.

SCROFULA

and all Scrofulous Diseases, Sores, Erysipelas, Eczema, Blotches, Ringworm, Tumors, Carbuncles, Boils and Eruptions of the Skin, are the direct result of an impure state of the blood. To cure these diseases the blood must be purified, and restored to a healthy and natural condition. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has for over forty years been recognized by eminent medical authorities as the most powerful blood purifier in existence. It frees the system from all foul humors, enriches and strengthens the blood, removes all traces of mercurial treatment, and proves itself a complete master of all scrofulous diseases.

A Recent Cure of Scrofulous Sores.

"Some months ago I was troubled with scrofulous sores (ulcers) on my legs. The limbs were badly swollen and inflamed, and the sores discharged large quantities of offensive matter. Every remedy I tried failed, until I used AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, of which I have now taken three bottles, with the result that the sores are healed, and my general health greatly improved. I feel very grateful for the good your medicine has done me. Yours respectfully, MRS. ANN O'BRIAN.
